

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute ESSAY SERIES

ALDOUS HUXLEY

Aldous Huxley (1894–1963) was a British novelist, essayist, poet, and dramatist, best known as the author of Brave New World. He was also a lifelong pacifist whose disillusionment with twentieth century social values was often expressed in witty satire. During World War Two he was a key member of the British Peace Pledge Union. After the war he moved to the United States where he became interested in Eastern mysticism and experimented with hallucinogenic drugs; it was at this point in his life that his vision turned away from the apocalyptic and he began to write about his dreams of a utopian society.

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute

The A.J. Muste Memorial Institute is a non-profit tax exempt organization. It was founded in 1974 to further the goals of its namesake: to explore and teach how nonviolence can be used to bring about world peace, and social and economic justice.

Through grants, sponsorships, the publication of social change resources, and the development of independent educational programs, the Institute has supported more than fifty projects and has helped people bring the message of peace virtually all over the world.

The Institute is pleased to offer this pamphlet as part of a series comprised of important classical and contemporary pacifist writings. Please write for a list of the other titles available.
