Purchased from the Income of The Harriet Monroe Fund for Modern Poetry
The Gift of
A Friend of the University
Poetry asks its friends to become Supporting Subscribers by paying ten dollars a year to its fund. Next September will complete the initial period of five years for which the magazine was endowed. All who believe in the general purpose and policy of the magazine, and recognize the need and value of such an organ of the art, are invited to assist thus in maintaining it.
SNOW

T HE three stood listening to a fresh access
Of wind that caught against the house a moment,
Gulped snow, and then blew free again—the Coles,
Dressed, but dishevelled from some hours of sleep,
Meserve belittled in the great skin coat he wore.

Meserve was first to speak. He pointed backward
Over his shoulder with his pipe-stem, saying,
“You can just see it glancing off the roof,
Making a great scroll upward toward the sky,
Long enough for recording all our names on.
I think I'll just call up my wife and tell her
I'm here—so far—and starting on again.
I'll call her softly so that if she's wise
And gone to sleep, she needn't wake to answer.”
Three times he barely stirred the bell, then listened.
I called you up to say good-night from here
Before I went to say good-morning there. . . .
I thought I would . . . I know, but Lett—I know . . .
I could, but what’s the sense? The rest won’t be So bad . . . Give me an hour for it . . . Ho ho,
Three hours to here! But that was all up hill;
The rest is down . . . Why no, no, not a wallow;
They kept their heads and took their time to it,
Like darlings, both of them. They’re in the barn. . . .
My dear, I’m coming just the same; I didn’t Call you to ask you to invite me home.”

He lingered for some word she wouldn’t say,
Said it at last himself, “Good-night,” and then,
Getting no answer, closed the telephone.
The three stood in the lamplight round the table
With lowered eyes a moment till he said, “I’ll just see how the horses are.”

“Yes, do,”

Both the Coles said together. Mrs. Cole
Added: “You can judge better after seeing. . . .
I want you here with me, Fred. Leave him here,
Brother Meserve. You know to find your way
Out through the shed.”

“I guess I know my way.
I guess I know where I can find my name
Snow

Carved in the shed to tell me who I am
If it don't tell me where I am. I used
To play—"

"You tend your horses and come back.
Fred Cole, you're going to let him!"

"Well, aren't you?
How can you help yourself?"

"I called him Brother.
Why did I call him that?"

"It's right enough.
That's all you ever heard him called round here.
He seems to have lost off his Christian name."

"Christian enough I should call that myself.
He took no notice, did he? Well, at least
I didn't use it out of love of him,
The dear knows. I detest the thought of him—
With his ten children under ten years old.
I hate his wretched little Racker Sect,
All's ever I heard of it, which isn't much.
But that's not saying—Look, Fred Cole, it's twelve,
Isn't it, now? He's been here half an hour.
He says he left the village store at nine:
Three hours to do four miles—a mile an hour
Or not much better. Why, it doesn't seem
As if a man could move that slow and move.
Try to think what he did with all that time.
And three miles more to go!"
“Don’t let him go.
Stick to him, Helen. Make him answer you.
That sort of man talks straight on all his life
From the last thing he said himself, stone deaf
To anything anyone else may say.
I should have thought, though, you could make him hear you.”

“What is he doing out a night like this?
Why can’t he stay at home?”

“He had to preach.”

“It’s no night to be out.”

“He may be small,
He may be good, but one thing’s sure, he’s tough.”

“And strong of stale tobacco.”

“He’ll pull through.”

“You only say so. Not another house
Or shelter to put into from this place
To theirs. I’m going to call his wife again.”

“Wait, and he may. Let’s see what he will do.
Let’s see if he will think of her again.
But then I doubt he’s thinking of himself—
He doesn’t look on it as anything.”

“He shan’t go—there!”

“It is a night, my dear.”

“One thing: he didn’t drag God into it.”
"He don't consider it a case for God."

"You think so, do you? You don't know the kind. He's getting up a miracle this minute. Privately, to himself, right now, he's thinking He'll make a case of it if he succeeds, But keep still if he fails."

"Keep still all over. He'll be dead—dead and buried."

"Such a trouble! Not but I've every reason not to care What happens to him if it only takes Some of the sanctimonious conceit Out of one of those pious scalawags."

"Nonsense to that! You want to see him safe."

"You like the runt."

"Don't you a little?"

"Well, I don't like what he's doing, which is what You like, and like him for."

"Oh, yes you do. You like your fun as well as anyone; Only you women have to put these airs on To impress men. You've got us so ashamed Of being men we can't look at a good fight Between two boys and not feel bound to stop it.

[61]
Let the man freeze an ear or two, I say.
He's here—I leave him all to you. Go in
And save his life. . . . All right, come in, Meserve.
Sit down, sit down. How did you find the horses?"

"Fine, fine."

"And ready for some more? My wife here Says it won't do. You've got to give it up."

Won't you, to please me? Please! If I say please?
Mr. Meserve, I'll leave it to your wife.
What did your wife say on the telephone?"

Meserve seemed to heed nothing but the lamp
Or something not far from it on the table.
By straightening out and lifting a forefinger,
He pointed with his hand from where it lay
Like a white crumpled spider on his knee:
"That leaf there in your open book! It moved
Just then, I thought. It's stood erect like that,
There on the table, ever since I came,
Trying to turn itself backward or forward—
I've had my eye on it to make out which:
If forward, then it's with a friend's impatience—
You see I know—to get you on to things
It wants to see how you will take; if backward,
It's from regret for something you have passed
And failed to see the good of. Never mind,
Things must expect to come in front of us
A many times—I don’t say just how many,
That varies with the things—before we see them.
One of the lies would make it out that nothing
Ever presents itself before us twice.
Where would we be at last if that were so?
Our very life depends on everything’s
Recurring till we answer from within.
The thousandth time may prove the charm. That leaf!
It can’t turn either way. It needs the wind’s help.
But the wind didn’t move it if it moved;
It moved itself. The wind’s at naught in here.
It couldn’t stir so sensitively poised
A thing as that. It couldn’t reach the lamp
To get a puff of black smoke from the flame,
Or blow a rumple in the collie’s coat.
You make a little foursquare block of air,
Quiet and light and warm, in spite of all
The illimitable dark and cold and storm,
And by so doing give these three—lamp, dog,
And book-leaf—that keep near you, their repose;
Though for all anyone can tell, repose
May be the thing you haven’t, yet you give it.
So false it is that what we haven’t we can’t give;
So false, that what we always say is true.
I’ll have to turn the leaf if no one else will.
It won’t lie down. Then let it stand. Who cares?”
"I shouldn't want to hurry you, Meserve,
But if you're going—Say you'll stay, you know?
But let me raise this curtain on a scene,
And show you how it's piling up against you.
You see the snow-white through the white of frost?
Ask Helen how far up the sash it's climbed Since last we read the gage."

"It looks as if
Some pallid thing had squashed its features flat,
And its eyes shut with overeagerness
To see what people found so interesting
In one another, and had gone to sleep
Of its own stupid lack of understanding,
Or broken its white neck of mushroom stuff
Short off, and died against the window-pane."

"Brother Meserve, take care, you'll scare yourself
More than you will us with such nightmare talk.
It's you it matters to, because it's you
Who have to go out into it alone."

"Let him talk, Helen, and perhaps he'll stay."

"Before you drop the curtain—I'm reminded:
You recollect the boy who came out here
To breathe the air one winter—had a room
Down at the Avery's? Well, one sunny morning
After a downy storm, he passed our place
And found me banking up the house with snow.
And I was burrowing in deep for warmth,
Piling it well above the window-sills.
The snow against the window caught his eye.
'Hey, that's a pretty thought'—those were his words.
'So you can think it's six feet deep outside,
While you sit warm and read up balanced rations.
You can't get too much winter in the winter.'
Those were his words. And he went home and all
But banked the daylight out of Avery's windows.
Now you and I would go to no such length.
At the same time you can't deny it makes
It not a mite worse, sitting here, we three,
Playing our fancy, to have the snow-line run
So high across the pane outside. There where
There is a sort of tunnel in the frost
More like a tunnel than a hole—way down
At the far end of it you see a stir
And quiver like the frayed edge of the drift
Blown in the wind. I like that—I like that.
Well, now I leave you, people.'

"Come, Meserve,
We thought you were deciding not to go—
The ways you found to say the praise of comfort
And being where you are. You want to stay."

"I'll own it's cold for such a fall of snow.
This house is frozen brittle, all except

[65]
This room you sit in. If you think the wind
Sounds further off, it's not because it's dying;
You're further under in the snow—that's all—
And feel it less. Hear the soft bombs of dust
It bursts against us at the chimney mouth,
And at the eaves. I like it from inside
More than I shall out in it. But the horses
Are rested and it's time to say good-night,
And let you get to bed again. Good-night,
Sorry I had to break in on your sleep."

"Lucky for you you did. Lucky for you
You had us for a half-way station
To stop at. If you were the kind of man
Paid heed to women, you'd take my advice
And for your family's sake stay where you are.
But what good is my saying it over and over?
You've done more than you had a right to think
You could do—now. You know the risk you take In going on."

"Our snow-storms as a rule
Aren't looked on as man-killers, and although I'd rather be the beast that sleeps the sleep
Under it all, his door sealed up and lost,
Than the man fighting it to keep above it,
Yet think of the small birds at roost and not
In nests. Shall I be counted less than they are?
Their bulk in water would be frozen rock

[66]
In no time out to-night. And yet to-morrow
They will come budding boughs from tree to tree
Flirting their wings and saying Chicadee,
As if not knowing what you meant by the word storm.”

“But why, when no one wants you to go on?
Your wife—she doesn’t want you to. We don’t,
And you yourself don’t want to. Who else is there?”

“Save us from being cornered by a woman!
Well, there’s”—She told Fred afterward that in
The pause right there, she thought the dreaded word
Was coming, “God.” But no, he only said, “Well, there’s—the storm. That says I must go on.
That wants me as a war might if it came.
Ask any man.”

He threw her that as something
To last her till he got outside the door.
He had Cole with him to the barn to see him off.
When Cole returned he found his wife still standing
Beside the table near the open book,
Not reading it.

“Well, what kind of a man
Do you call that?” she said.

“He had the gift
Of words, or is it tongues I ought to say?”

“Was ever such a man for seeing likeness?”

[67]
“Or disregarding people’s civil questions—
What? We’ve found out in one hour more about him
Than we had seeing him pass by in the road
A thousand times. If that’s the way he preaches!
You didn’t think you’d keep him after all.
Oh, I’m not blaming you. He didn’t leave you
Much say in the matter, and I’m just as glad We’re not in for a night of him. No sleep
If he had stayed. The least thing set him going.
It’s quiet as an empty church without him.”

“But how much better off are we as it is?
We’ll have to sit here till we know he’s safe.”

“Yes, I suppose you’ll want to, but I shouldn’t.
He knows what he can do, or he wouldn’t try.
Get into bed I say, and get some rest.
He won’t come back, and if he telephones,
It won’t be for an hour or two.”

“Well then—
We can’t be any help by sitting here
And living his fight through with him, I suppose.”

Cole had been telephoning in the dark.

Mrs. Cole’s voice came from an inner room:
“Did she call you or you call her?”

[68]
She me.
You'd better dress—you won't go back to bed.
We must have been asleep—it's three and after."

"Had she been ringing long? I'll get my wrapper—
I want to speak to her."

"All she said was,
He hadn't come, and had he really started."

"She knew he had, poor thing, two hours ago."

"He had the shovel. He'll have made a fight."

"Why did I ever let him leave this house!"

"Don't begin that. You did the best you could
To keep him—though perhaps you didn't quite Conceal a wish to see him show the spunk
To disobey you. Much his wife'll thank you."

"Fred, after all I said! You shan't make out
That it was any way but what it was.
Did she let on by any word she said
She didn't thank me?"

"When I told her 'Gone,'
'Well, then,' she said, and 'Well then'—like a threat.
And then her voice came scraping slow: 'Oh, you,
Why did you let him go?'"

"Asked why we let him?
You let me there. I'll ask her why she let him.
She didn't dare to speak when he was here.
Their number's—twenty-one? The thing won't work.
Someone's receiver's down. The handle stumbles.
The stubborn thing, the way it jars your arm!
It's theirs. She's dropped it from her hand and gone."

"Try speaking. Say, 'Hello.' "

"Hello, hello."

"What do you hear?"

"I hear an empty room—
You know—it sounds that way. And yes, I hear—
I think I hear a clock—and windows rattling.
No step though. If she's there she's sitting down."

"Shout, she may hear you."

"Shouting is no good."

"Keep speaking then."

You don't suppose—? She wouldn't go out-doors?"

"I'm half afraid that's just what she might do."

"And leave the children?"

"Wait and call again.
You can't hear whether she has left the door
Wide open, and the wind's blown out the lamp,
And the fire's died, and the room's dark and cold?"

"One of two things, either she's gone to bed
Or gone out-doors."
“In which case both are lost. Do you know what she's like? Have you ever met her? It's strange she doesn't want to speak to us.”

“Fred, see if you can hear what I hear. Come.”

“A clock, maybe.”

“Don't you hear something else?”

“Not talking.”

“No.”

“Why, yes, I hear—what is it?”

“What do you say it is?”

“A baby's crying!”

“Frantic it sounds though muffled and far off.”

“Its mother wouldn't let it cry like that, Not if she's there.”

“What do you make of it?”

“There's only one thing possible to make— That is, assuming that she has gone out. Of course she hasn't, though.”

They both sat down Helpless. “There's nothing we can do till morning.”

“Fred, I shan't let you think of going out.”

“Hold on.” The double bell began to chirp. They started up. Fred took the telephone. [71]
“Hello, Meserve. You’re there, then! And your wife? . . .
Good! Why I asked—she didn’t seem to answer. . . .
He says she went to let him in the barn. . . .
We’re glad. Oh, say no more about it, man.
Drop in and see us when you’re passing.”

“Well,
She has him then, though what she wants him for
I don’t see.”

“Possibly not for herself.
Maybe she only wants him for the children.”

“The whole to-do seems to have been for nothing.
What spoiled our night was to him just his fun.
What did he come in for? To talk and visit?
Thought he’d just call to tell us it was snowing.
If he thinks he is going to make our house
A half-way coffee-house ’twixt town and nowhere—”

“I thought you’d feel you’d been too much concerned.”

“You think you haven’t been concerned yourself.”

“If you mean he was inconsiderate
To rout us out to think for him at midnight
And then take our advice no more than nothing,
Why, I agree with you. But let’s forgive him.
We’ve had a share in one night of his life.
What’ll you bet he ever calls again?”

Robert Frost
TO W. J. C.

October 5th, 1848—September 19th, 1916

Why is it, when they wreathe about your name
Garlands of praise—cry soldier, diplomat,
Lover of justice, statesman; and enrich
The pillage of their hearts with bitter tears
For your great heart that beats no more—
Why do I see only that tilt of the lip
And gleam of the eyes, the sudden whimsical smile
That used to break the grand lines of your face?—
And hear only some little tender word,
Some love-joke tripping up our futile pride
With doubt of human grandeur?

Sweet—oh, brave!
Oh, brave and sweet through the strange sun-shot maze
You passed unwavering—holding out your hands
To give and bless, freeing your eager mind
In warm bold words, opening wide your eyes
To see the light, follow the clearing path
Out to great spaces.

Go—go forth! They win you.
I see you there against the sunset glow
Waving your hand, smiling your quizzical smile.
“What next?” I hear you say. Then the sun flaunts
Its crimson to the zenith, and goes down
To make another day. And you are gone.

Harriet Monroe
OLD FOLK-SONGS OF UKRAINA

THE KALINA

Was I not once the red cranberry
By the river flowing?
My father's only child was I
In his house growing.

But they plucked the boughs of the Kalina,
They made great bunches.
Such is my fortune—oh, unhappy fortune!

And on a day they married me.
As I was bidden
I married—and, my blinded eyes,
Forever hidden,

The world grew dark upon that morning.
Such is my fortune—oh, unhappy fortune!

Is there no river that I may drown in?
Was there none other
Than he, the youth to whom they wed me,
Father and mother?

Rivers a-plenty can be found here,
But dry the bed now.
And youths—brave, gallant youths—are countless;
But they are dead now!
SONG OF DEPARTURE

A bride of Bukovina speaks:

Dear my mother, weep not—
I shall not take all;
See, the cows and oxen
Leave I in the stall.

I take just black eyebrows,
Only eyes of blue;
And upon your table
Tears I leave for you;

And the little pathway
Where my footsteps fell
While I brought you water
Daily from the well.

Her mother speaks:

Pathway, little garden—
(Ah, she must depart!)
While I gaze upon you
Faints my breaking heart.

RUTHENIAN LOVERS

“In the fields grows the rye, rye that is green, is green!
Tell me, my lover, how livest thou, when never my face is seen?”
POETRY: A Magazine of Verse

"Out in the fields, down-beaten, rye lies upon its face—
So do I live without thee, the good Lord giving his grace."

MY FIELD, MY FIELD

Fragment of a very old song

O my field, my field!
Ploughed with bones,
Harrowed with my breast,
Watered with blood
From the heart, from the bosom—
Tell me, my field,
When will better days be?

My field, O my field
By my grandfather won,
Why dost thou not give
Me the means of life?
Bitter toil! with my own blood stained—
My heart’s blood is there!
How bitter for me, my field,
To look on thee!

Done in English by Florence Randal Livesay

[76]
FOUR JAPANESE PAINTINGS

I THE PINE BRANCH

_A Painting by Kenzan_

A pine-branch stretches out
Across the silence . . .

. . . Grey silence, untroubled
Until this living thing
Smote it into music. . . .

The void is restless now.
Silence shall be no more.
Greyness shall be no more,
Nor any peace.
For a singing curve and color
Have entered the vast dwelling—
A life, singing
Of the suns and the snows.
Now the old gods tremble
In their timeless halls;
Now the far halls beyond Orion
Are shaken with music.
For this chord, living,
This soul that knows not peace—
This dream-dust—stretches out
Across the silence.

[77]
II PINES ON A MOUNTAIN

A Screen by Yeitoku

Red pine-trunks!
Immutable pines!
Pillars upright under the grey sky!
Pillars upright over the chasmed earth!—
Upon these snow-heights
Your downward sloping branches
Point toward the human world
Remote and troubled.
But here on the ultimate ramparts
Of the winter hills,
Your huge columns
Rise toward bleak heaven—
Like an indomitable procession
Of warriors, dark, green-crested,
To whom the snows
Are only wine and trumpets,
To whom the winds
Are only battle.

[78]
The Wave Symphony

III THE WAVE SYMPHONY

A Screen by Sotatsu

Around islands of jade and malachite
And lapis-lazuli and jasper,
Under golden clouds,
Struggle the grey-gold waves.

The waves are advancing,
Swirling, eddying; the pale waves
Are leaping into foam, and retreating—
And straining again until they seem not waves
But gigantic crawling hands.
The waves clutch at the clouds,
The near and golden clouds;
They rise in spires over the clouds,
And over the pine-branch set against the clouds.
And around the islands,
Jasper and jade,
Their rhythms circle and sweep and re-echo
With hollow and foam-crest,
Infinitely interlacing their orbits and cycles
That join and unravel, and battle and answer,
From tumult to tumult, from music to music,
Crest to trough, foam-height to hollow,
Peace drowning passion, and passion
Leaping from peace.
IV BUDDHA APPEARING FROM BEHIND MOUNTAINS

A Painting by Choga

Two hills meet—
Two dark green hills.
About their shoulders
Silver mists cling.

Slowly the gigantic Face of the Buddha
In massive presence
Looks over the hills.
Tranquil his brow, unsmiling his lips;
Filling the whole sky with his haloes of glory,
He broods in a dream of gold.
Measureless peace sleeps on his golden forehead;
Measureless compassion
Weighs on his eyes.
Yet as I look
It seems that his terrible hidden hands
Even now are stirring
To rend apart the hills—
To divide the corrupt and cloven earth
For the triumphal entry of his burning form.

Arthur Davison Ficke

[80]
NEW VERSE

LOVE SONG

What have I to say to you
When we shall meet?
Yet—
I lie here thinking of you.

The stain of love
Is upon the world.
Yellow, yellow, yellow,
It eats into the leaves,
Smears with saffron
The horned branches that lean Heavily
Against a smooth purple sky.

There is no light—
Only a honey-thick stain
That drips from leaf to leaf
And limb to limb,
Spoiling the colors
Of the whole world.

I am alone.
The weight of love
Has buoyed me up
Till my head
Knocks against the sky.

[81]
See me!
My hair is dripping with nectar—
Starlings carry it
On their black wings.
See, at last
My arms and my hands
Are lying idle.

How can I tell
If I shall ever love you again
As I do now?

NAKED

What fool would feel
His cheeks burn
Because of the snow?
Would he call it
By a name, give it
Breasts, features,
Bare limbs?
Would he call it
A woman?
(Surely then he would be A fool.)

And see her,
Warmed with the cold,

[82]
Go upon the heads
Of creatures
Whose faces lean
To the ground?

Would he watch
The compassion of Her eyes,
That look, now up
Now down,
To the turn of The wind and
The turn of
The shivering minds
She touches—
Motionless—troubled?

I ask you—
I ask you, my townspeople,
What fool is this?

Would he forget
The sight of His mother and His wife
Because of her?—
Have his heart
Turned to ice
That will not soften?

[83]
POETRY: A Magazine of Verse

What!
Would he see a thing
Lovelier than
A high-school girl,
With the skill
Of Venus
To stand naked—
Naked on the air?

Falling snow and you up there—waiting.

MARRIAGE

So different, this man
And this woman:
A stream flowing
In a field.

APOLOGY

Why do I write today?
The beauty of
The terrible faces
Of our nonentities
Stirs me to it:

[84]
Apology

Colored women
Day workers,
Old and experienced,
Returning home at dusk
In cast-off clothing,
Faces like Old Florentine oak.

Also
The set pieces
Of your faces stir me—
Leading citizens:
But not
In the same way.

SUMMER SONG

Wanderer moon,
Smiling
A faintly ironical smile
At this brilliant,
Dew-moistened
Summer morning—
A detached,
Sleepily indifferent
Smile,
A wanderer’s smile—
If I should

[85]
Buy a shirt
Your color, and Put on a necktie
Sky-blue,
Where would they carry me?
Over the hills and Far away?
Where would they carry me?

THE OLD WORSHIPPER

How times change, old friend,
And how little anything changes!

We used to collect butterflies
And insects in Kipp’s woods—
Do you remember?
Now this wonderful collection
From the Amazon
Comes quite naturally
For you to weigh and to classify.

Quiet and unnoticed
The flower of your whole life
Has opened its perfect petals—
And none to witness, save one Old worshipper!

William Carlos Williams
EDITORIAL COMMENT

TRUTH AND THE PARADOX

HERE are times when the beauty of life seems too keen to be borne, seasons of joy or sorrow when the chaos of people and purposes assumes processional dignity, and the babel of tongues becomes a choral song. It is as if one watched this earthly episode from some far planet of larger spaces and years, and saw its criss-cross of lines, its blots and splashes of color, merge into a noble pattern set for the delight of gods. From that vantage-ground lost meanings become clear: the amazing effrontery of birth, life's heroic and unsatisfied search, the sudden silence of death, the tumultuous movement of generations around the niggardly fruitful earth—around a whirling ball suspended in space as by a single hair, held to its course by an incredibly delicate balance of warring forces—all these become an act of the eternal passion, a thought of the infinite consciousness, a daring flight of the universal spirit.

To be a part of it all—to have lived in the solar nebula and resolved into the cloud-bound earth; to have quickened into the beginnings of life, and spawned and struggled through experimental ages; to have groped outward through fish and beast and bird, beating against barriers, blindly denying denial, unconsciously seeking consciousness; to be born at last into a being erect and sensient, who gathers and records knowledge, who feels beauty even to the rapture of song, the ecstasy of art, who knows himself a little and gives that little away in love, who apprehends the truth a little in poignant suffering and joy; and finally to challenge the infinite with new demands, that would make of our life an antechamber and our death a gateway, that would round out the mighty circle of existence to the remotest agony of truth:—to be a part of this colossal movement is a destiny so sublime as to be beyond the reach of deliberate thought, conceivable only in rare and sudden emotions, that come unbidden in moments of intense illumination.

The mystery is not the greatness of life, but its littleness. That we, so grandly born, so mightily endowed, should grope with blind eyes and bound limbs in the dust and mire of petty desires and grievances; until we can hardly see the blue of the sky or the glory of the seasons, until we can hardly clasp our neighbor's hand or hear his voice—this is the inexplicable mystery, the blasting unreality, the bitter falsehood that underlies all the dark evils of the world.

H. M.

POEM-GAMES

On the evenings of November twenty-sixth and twenty-ninth Mr. Vachel Lindsay and Miss Eleanor Dougherty will give together at the Chicago Little Theatre, a presentation of a few of the former's poems, the poet chanting the words while the dancer interprets them. At least this will be the formula with The King of Yellow Butterflies, The Tree of
Poem-games

Laughing Bells and The Potatoes' Dance. In King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba and Aladdin and the Jinn the poet promises to take "a certain co-operative part in the acting, though never bringing myself forward as anything much more than the prestidigitator who brings the dove from the hat, or the ambassador between the poem and its interpreter." In the case of these two poems the audience is expected to join in the chorus, as many audiences have done in various towns, even without Miss Dougherty to lead them.

Last summer, when I saw an early rehearsal of these "poem-games," I found the performance very beautiful and novel. This was somewhat to my surprise, because I had feared an effect of incongruity. It was a gay and delicate blending of the two arts, like dancing to music or singing with an orchestral accompaniment.

For precedents one must go back to English folk games of the seventeenth century and earlier, which have died out in England, but which still survive among Carolina and Tennessee mountaineers: this according to Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, of the English Folk Dance Society and the Stratford-on-Avon School of Folk Song and Dance, who has been lecturing in this country. Recent studies of the verse-and-action games of these mountaineers have convinced him that they preserve intact English folk-games of the period of ancestral emigration to America.

Mr. Lindsay would seem to be working toward a new development of this art of long ago, which he enriches by using the dance in addition to gesture, marching and posturing. Indeed, he says: "It is my hope that this work brings my verses a little nearer to the old precedents of folk-dancing and folk-lore." And it all follows the suggestion made to the Illinois poet by Mr. Yeats over two years ago—to "restore the primitive singing of poetry."

H. M.

REVIEWS

MR. HAGEDORN'S CLYTEMNESTRA

The Great Maze and The Heart of Youth—a Poem and a Play, by Hermann Hagedorn. Macmillan Co.

The long poem, in five parts, which opens this volume retells in full-swinging blank verse the old story of Aga-memnon's return and death.

The poet's motive in using this ancient tale seems to be a new interpretation of the character of Clytemnestra. The queen kills her husband, not because she wants to but because she doesn't want to, not because she hates him and loves Aegisthus, but because she loves him and despises Aegisthus, with whom she had dallied for years merely to pass the time and dull her longing for her royal lord. She lays down the law thus to Aegisthus:

Not fear or love or you or Agamemnon
Shall have the power to crush me or deride,
Condemn me or forgive. I will not bow;
I will not be raised up; I will not drink
Mercy from any lips. My days are mine,
And I will keep the government of them. . . .
I am the Queen. I am not moved. I move.

[90]
Unwilling to accept forgiveness and reinstatement from the man whom she loves and who loves her, she uses her baser lover to kill him.

Now this may or may not be a plausible modern reading of Clytemnestra's motive. It seems to me a bit strained, a motive which might lead to suicide but hardly to murder; and in its high-sounding presentation the old sculpturesque royalty of the queen seems to disappear. I wonder, in following it, whether, in spite of the Great War, we of this twentieth century have lost our approach to, our belief in, stark and simple tragic passion like that which the elder poets, and the world in general, long granted to Clytemnestra, Orestes, Judith, Lady Macbeth, and other famous murderers of history or legend. But my chief objection to Mr. Hagedorn's idea of Clytemnestra is not any questioning of his competence, or of the truth or falsehood, the strength or weakness, of modern studies of human motives; but a deep-rooted objection to the misuse, by any modern mind, of a great typical figure to express an idea contrary to that which it has always embodied, and to which it is, in a sense, sacred.

I own to extreme impatience when a modern poet would persuade us, for example, that Judith fell in love with Holofernes, or Jael with Sisera, before she slew him. Are there not enough amorous women in ancient and modern times whom our poets may study to their hearts' content? Why should they lay violent hands on these two warrior women, long sacred in the imagination of many nations as expressing, to the extreme degree, the tribal impulse of patriotism? The warrior woman is an authentic type; examples of her may be found today much nearer home than Serbia, where she has been quite recently conspicuous in battle beside her brothers. Can our poets no longer recognize and appreciate this type, that they should violate the old biblical tradition and try to add two great Amazons to the long list of amorous heroines?

In the same way Mr. Hagedorn lays violent and sacrilegious hands on Clytemnestra. To the Greek poets, who created her out of more or less historic legend, she was a starkly simple example of the amorous woman who stops at nothing, even the murder of a king, to rid herself and her lover of an avenging intruder. These poets enshrined her figure indestructibly in that form; and any modern effort, even the ablest, to reshape her is as futile as would be the chisel of Rodin on the great portal of the cathedral of Chartres. Rodin, however, would know enough, and feel enough, not to attempt it.

There are modern women who might set forth effectively Mr. Hagedorn's idea, which is a good enough idea in its way. Only none of these has yet acquired a glamour which makes the world instinctively take the poet's word for her beauty and royalty, instinctively believe him when he tells us of "her enigmatic eyes," "the vast black night of her eyes," or of her April moods

Of swan-like queenliness afloat on dreams.

The poet who chooses a figure long enshrined gives himself
Mr. Hagedorn's Clytemnestra

the advantage of the tradition even while he violates the tradition, and saves himself the trouble of complete creation.

Mr. Hagedorn's diction is fairly modern, in spite of two or three "deems"—modern enough to admit the word "daddy" on little Electra's lips. But the dialogue, of which most of the poem is composed, is undramatic; it misses the quality of speech.

The Heart of Youth is a picturesque mediaeval play with which the boys of the Hill School dedicated their out-door theatre last year. It is unpretentious, simple and sweet, and should be effective when played by boys or girls, or both. It ends with a fine moment, when the crowd, seeking and singing, "surge forth with torches into the night."

H. M.

A DECADE OF GIBSON

This book enables one to compare Mr. Gibson's present with his past, for the war poems are new while the six brief plays, which fill more than half the volume, were first printed in 1906.

Even at that time the poet had chosen his theme—the life of the poor in rural England, and had stript his blank verse down to the barest simplicity. Though the little plays—or, rather, dramatic episodes—are perhaps over-deliberate and their technique is yet not quite free, one feels in them spiritual intuition and a depth of yearning sympathy with the harsh struggles, and keen joys and sorrows, of simple folk who live close to the niggardly fruitful earth and to animals. Ruth, coming home through the bitter snow to bear the child of a vagabond lover, bends lovingly over a weak little new-born lamb:

Ah, what a night to come into the world!
Poor motherless thing! and those poor patient mothers!
I might have known it was the lambing storm.

And Esther Shield, just wedded, undaunted by her mother-in-law’s story of her own tragic marriage and prophecy of woe, turns in triumph to her ardent young mate, saying:

I shall bide.
I have heard all, and yet I would not go,
Nor would I have a single word unsaid.
I loved you, husband; yet I did not know you
Until your mother spoke. I know you now,
And I am not afraid.

But still more interesting are the Battle lyrics—surer in technique, more mature in the handling of character. In fact, with the single exception of the Brooke sonnets, they are the truest and most poignant war poems we have had thus far from any English poet; expressing “the vast unreason of war” through the stark irony and savage simplicity of the common soldier’s or refugee’s reaction. Readers of Poetry will remember many of these withering songs, which, like a flame, light up the sudden and perishing emotion. Here is one they missed, called Salvage:

So suddenly her life
Had crashed about that gray old country wife,
Naked she stood, and gazed
Bewildered, while her home about her blazed.
New-widowed, and bereft
Of her five sons, she clung to what was left,
Still hugging all she'd got—
A toy gun and a copper coffee-pot.

The effect of this group of poems, like that of the finest American poem of this war, Miss Driscoll's Metal Checks, is to put out of date forever the romance, the glory, of battle —that ancient glamour which has been celebrated in song since Homer, and which Rupert Brooke, like a modern troubadour, set to the music of an ancient harp as he marched to his death. The poet who truly represents this age sings another tune. He expresses that bitter brooding in the depths of every heroic modern heart, the feeling that "in war," as the London Times reviewer says, "there are no longer men, there is no longer man; there are only sports of chance, pullers of triggers, bewildered fulfillers of instructions, cynical acceptors of destiny."

The book includes also, in the section Friends, the group of fine sonnets which we recently printed, and a few memorial and personal poems. Among the latter is this one, called Marriage:

```
Going my way of old,
Contented more or less,
I dreamt not life could hold
Such happiness.

I dreamt not that love's way
Could keep the golden height
Day after happy day,
Night after night.
```

H. M.

[95]

Trees—the title makes me think of John Muir of happy memory, and his wonderful love of trees. It passed the love of brothers, it was a proud rapture of understanding, a mystic spiritual communion, like the intimacy of a mediaeval saint with archangels. Trees were his archangels, ranged in shining ranks about the throne of God; and mercifully gathering at their feet the races of men, and interceding for them with the Most High. From the little quivering aspen, tender as a fawn, to the sequoia gigantea, noble as a mountain, he knew them to their deepest secrets, and loved them in his deepest heart.

Well, Mr. Monro loves trees too, in his odd and ingenious way. He says:

Tree-life is like a corridor between
The Seen and the Unseen.

Indeed, he almost "makes of their love an immorality."

Grip hard, become a root; so drive
Your muscles through the ground alive
That you'll be breaking from above your knees
Out into branches:

Thus he forces himself into tree-life. Then—

The trees throw up their singing leaves, and climb Spray over spray. They break through Time.
Their roots lash through the clay. They lave
The earth, and wash along the ground.
They burst in green wave over wave,
Fly in a blossom of light foam:
Rank following windy rank they come.
They flood the plain,
Swill through the valley, top the mound,
Tangled Trees

Flow over the low hill,
Curl round
The bases of the mountain, fill
Their crevices, and stain
Their ridges green.

But the poet kept "too much mortality":
They drove me forth. The angry trees
Roared till I tumbled lean and lewd
Out of that Paradise. The forest rose
To scourge my wavering conscience, and pursued.

But, though driven forth, he—we—cannot escape them:

How beautifully they grow,
Crowding the brink of silence everywhere!

Yet they leave their proper place—
They follow us and haunt us. We must build Houses of wood—and fill them with "fragments of the forest"—chairs, tables, doors, etc. Others we put to sleep under railroad tracks.

And some, some trees, before they die,
Carved and moulded small
Suddenly begin—
Oh, what a wild and windy woodland call
Out of the lips of the violin!

Such is the argument of this curiously subtle poem. Original it is, beyond question, and sometimes beautiful; but Mr. Monro's forest would be too uncanny, too sophisticated, for John Muir.

By way of moral we have a cryptic couplet at the end:

And you, be certain that you keep
Some memory of trees for sleep.

The book is a beautiful limited edition, all done by hand at the Temple Sheen Press. It has decorative wood-cuts—at least they look like old wood-cuts—by James Guthrie, the designs a clever cross between Blake and Morris. Why do they do these things so much better in England?
POETRY: A Magazine of Verse

H. M.

STEPHENS’ ROAD TO DUBLIN

The Rocky Road to Dublin, by James Stephens. Macmillan Co.

To sit down to review James Stephens is much like being asked to furnish a recipe for making star-dust, or to analyze the shivering beauty of the dawn. His work has the peculiarly Celtic quality of existing in space, completely divorced from the world as we know it. His beauty comes to us faintly, filtered through the simple words of every-day speech, which yet, as he writes them, are no longer the words we know, but subtle, delicate, shimmering things, full of gray undertones, swift flashes of silver humor and wisdom from some other world. To the many who love his work it is something beyond reason and analysis, something to be accepted joyfully, as wild flowers and meadow larks are accepted, and loved as instinctively.

This for instance, called The Secret:

I was frightened, for a wind
Crept along the grass to say
Something that was in my mind
Yesterday---

Something that I did not know
Could be found out by the wind,
I had buried it so low
In my mind.

[98]
Or this delectable bit, The Fur Coat:

I walked out in my Coat of Pride,
I looked about on every side,
And said the mountains should not be
Just where they were, and that the sea
Was badly placed, and that the beech
Should be an oak—and then from each
I turned in dignity as if
They were not there: I sniffed a sniff
And climbed upon my sunny shelf,
And sneezed a while, and scratched myself.

The Rocky Road to Dublin, however, in spite of its beauty, goes to prove definitely what Songs from the Clay had suggested, that Mr. Stephens is more of a poet in his prose than in his verse. In the forever inimitable Crock of Gold, one of the most fascinating books in English, and in The Demigods, although writing in prose, he is the ideal poet, tender, mystical, witty—and quite himself. In his poetry he has not yet quite found that self. He remains a little uncertain. And why, oh why, has he altered the haunting little poem Hawks, published long ago in Poetry, to the present insufficient version?

Yet, as there can be only one Synge, so there can only be one James Stephens. Let us sing a little chant to the leprecauns in his honor!

E. T.

OTHER BOOKS OF VERSE

If Masefield and W. W. Gibson, Frost and Masters—the whole company of story-tellers in verse today—had never written, there is small doubt that Turns and Movies would prove Conrad Aiken an authentic poet. But as it is, their unquiet ghosts stalk behind his work, Gibson most prominent in this volume, Masefield in Earth Triumphant.

This is the more unfortunate because Mr. Aiken has invention, vividness, compression and at times a pleasing lyric quality. His situations are real situations, swiftly told, his technique easy and effective. It is hard to say just where the authenticity seeps out, yet the total effect is that of a clever craftsman, working well in the medium of his day, yet never quite reaching to the heights.

The poems in this book are unusually even in quality, and it is difficult to choose between them. Perhaps Discordants, Boardman and Coffin and one numbered simply XIII are the most successful. They are too long to quote, but the following, Duval's Birds, is typical of the volume:

```
The parrot, screeching, flew out into the darkness,
Circled three times above the upturned faces
With a great whir of brilliant outspread wings,
And then returned to stagger on her finger.
She bowed and smiled, eliciting applause . .
The property man hated her dirty birds.
But it had taken years—yes, years—to train them
To shoulder flags, strike bells by tweaking strings,
Or climb sedately little flights of stairs.
When they were stubborn, she tapped them with a wand,
And her eyes glittered a little under the eyebrows.
The red one flapped and flapped on a swinging wire;
The little white ones winked round yellow eyes.
```

E. T.

This volume is typical of the later Viereck, full of wind and words, and the lure of scented flesh. That the war poems should be propaganda, not poetry, is pardonable. Better poets than he have lost their vision of art in the hot breath of war. But that he who had in his youth one of the purest lyric gifts of our day, should come before he is forty to the feeble puerilities of the love poems in this volume, is indeed pitiful. In the grave of the flesh Mr. Viereck has buried his talent. For the rest a merciful silence is best. E. T.

CLASSICS IN ENGLISH

The Poets’ Translation Series I-VI. The Egoist, London.

The translators of this series have an opportunity which most of them have neglected. H. D. is the exception.

Gilbert Murray has struck at Greek scholarship and done no good to English verse. Euripides for the working-man, at a shilling the play, in the style of fifty years ago—an ideal of socialism and popular education—Greek without tears. The only result can be still greater neglect of Greek in our schools. Why study Greek when an adequate translation can always be had, cheap and easy scholarship for the busy man? There are translations for the scholar—the splendid Oxford Aristotle—but these do not pretend to be literature. And what is scholarship is an introduction and commentary for the original, what is literature is enrichment of English by contact with Greek, a criticism of one language by another, a fertilisation. But there is no substitute, no adequate translation.
POETRY: A Magazine of Verse

Some of these translators have fallen into the abyss of Murray. Mr. Aldington's Anyte is good, but hardly ever steps aside from the path of Mackail. There is no use in merely multiplying translations of Greek epigrams which after all belong rather to the art of epigraphy than to literature. The Greeks, like the Italians, put intelligence upon monuments. If our tombstone artists could study Greek—but this is a divagation.

H. D. is a poet. She has at least avoided the traditional jargon prescribed for translators: she has turned Euripides into English verse which can be taken seriously, verse of our own time, as modern as was Swinburne's when it appeared. Her verse is a perversion of the opposite extreme. Swinburne is too fluid, H. D. too abrupt. The participle becomes an indicative; most of the "I saw" and "I heard" drop out; the chorus becomes an independent poem. Her type of verse makes her task the more difficult. It relies upon a succession of images; and the images of the Greek tragedian were made up of stock phrases rearranged. Thus she is compelled sometimes to lose contact with the original in avoiding clichés:

A flash—
Achilles passed along the beach . . .
Achilles had strapped the wind
About his ankles . . .

Euripides says only that the women saw Achilles swift-running, swift as the wind. It would be impossible to find equivalents for swift as the wind and swift-running and escape redundancy. This sort of improvement is permissible, but only marks time: it does not enrich English from Greek. And in a few cases, where Euripides’ style is merely bald, the alteration is not an improvement. “I keep the memory of the assembled army” becomes “My mind is graven with ships” with obvious loss of dignity. And in the translation—

> There is no power but in base men
> Nor any man whom the gods do not hate—

the meaning is completely perverted; Euripides has made the characteristic remark, that men should not strive to be illustrious (in “virtue” in the Greek sense) lest they bring down on themselves the invidia of the gods. Again,

> Each man is marked for his toil,
> Much labor is his fate,
> Nor is there any new hurt
> That may be added to the race:

is not only a similar mistranslation, but fails to rise quite to what is the emotional crisis of the play.

Still, it is a great deal to have translations that one can read, translations into the language of contemporary verse, even if H. D.’s monotonously short lines with excess of stops and defect of connectives are sometimes tiring to eye and ear. And often she does succeed in bringing something out of the Greek language to the English, in an immediate contact which gives life to both, the contact which makes it possible for the modern language perpetually to draw sustenance from the dead:

> May no child of mine,
> Nor any child of my child,

[103]
Poetry: A Magazine of Verse

Ever fashion such a tale
As the Phrygians shall murmur
As they stoop at their distaffs
Whispering with Lydians
Splendid with weight of gold . . .

The translations of Sappho and Leonidas do not deserve mention. Some of the Latin poetry of the Renaissance which Mr. Aldington gives us is translated for the first time, and some may be found in Mr. Pound's Spirit of Romance. Mr. Flint has done a service in translating the Mosella, but is not a "boat propelled with oars" the same thing as a row-boat?

T. S. Eliot

The Divine Comedy, translated by Henry Johnson. Yale University Press.

It is assuredly an honorable ambition that prompts one to the difficult and ungrateful task of translating metrically the entire Divine Comedy, line for line; and it is an honorable procedure to "rely solely," as Professor Johnson has done, "on one's control of the English medium, unaided." He has indeed been as "faithful" as he claims. More: he has shown himself sturdy, dogged, ploddingly, professorially persistent. He has made a real campaign, like the British in Picardy—a trench a day, a town a week; and on page 436 he reaches duly the church triumphant and the luce eterna.

But a line-for-line translation of Dante must always tip toward prose. The verbal glamour is necessarily lost; the finely-woven chain of the terza rima—a web of steel and of flowers—is sacrificed no less. We are likely to have, when all's done, not the carved marbles of a Florentine duomo, not only a plain, neat, four-square edifice in colonial brick; not samite or cloth-of-gold, but simple serge or cheviot; not beccaficos or peacocks' tongues, but just everyday roast beef and boiled potatoes. It cannot be said that the present translation seems less conscientiously humdrum than one in prose (such as Norton's), or one on the same line-for-line plan (such as Longfellow's), or one in short paragraphs of literal prose, corresponding to each terzina (such as the co-operative version issued by Dent). Indeed, it would not be difficult to go farther and indicate passages where Professor Johnson has renounced advantages of epithet and rhythm rightly his. Briefly, here as elsewhere, the Unbeschreibliche does not get itself gethan.

The present volume is absolutely without notes, except for a few pages devoted, curiously, to the translation of Latin phrases. However, in conjunction with another book of the right sort, it might serve a useful lexicographical purpose. Alongside of some good Italian text that has a liberal provision of notes both grammatical and historical—old Bianchi's, let us say—it would become a real help, as a pony or even as a dictionary, for the American student who has taken up Dante a little before being prepared for him.

A handsome volume, inside and out.

H. B. F.
ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARDS

Each year our November number bears a special and difficult responsibility—the awarding of prizes. This year the editors and advisory committee of POETRY are enabled, through the generosity of three lovers of the art, all of Chicago, to award three prizes for poems printed in the magazine during its fourth year—October, 1915, to September, 1916. The first prize is restricted to a citizen of the United States; the other two, of which one is for a lyric, make no distinction of nationality.

From this competition poems by members of the editorial staff are withdrawn, the members represented this year being Alice Corbin Henderson, Henry B. Fuller and Ezra Pound. Poems by Mr. Yeats are not eligible, because of his very gracious declination of our Guarantors' Prize the first year. Messrs. Sandburg and Lindsay, who received the Levinson Prize in 1914 and 1915, are not eligible again for that award. And translations are not considered.

The Helen Haire Levinson Prize of two hundred dollars, offered by Mr. Salmon O. Levinson, of Chicago, for a poem, or group of poems, by a citizen of the United States, is awarded to of Chicago, for his poem, All Life in a Life, published in the March number. One member of the jury, while concurring in the award to Mr. Masters, votes for the poem Arabel, in the November number.

MR. EDGAR LEE MASTERS

[106]
Announcement of Awards

The prize of one hundred dollars, offered by a guarantor for a poem or group of poems, is awarded to

MR. JOHN GOULD FLETCHER

for his Arizona Poems, published in the March number. Mr. Fletcher is a cosmopolite whose residence is difficult to state. As a child he lived in Little Rock, Arkansas; he studied at Harvard, but left before graduation to travel abroad; and since the war began he has lived chiefly in Boston. At present he is sojourning in London, where he recently married a young English lady.

The last of our three prizes has given the jury the most trouble of all, their first votes scattering through five or six of the year's twelve numbers. In this emergency the members fell back upon the simplest definition of a lyric, and remembered the prize-donor's stipulation that, in case of doubt, the prize should be awarded to a poet comparatively young and unknown. Therefore:

The prize of one hundred dollars, offered by Mrs. Julius Rosenwald, of Chicago, for a lyric poem, is awarded to

MISS MUNA LEE

of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, for one or more poems of the group, Foot-notes, published in the January number. The jury is divided as to the particular poem to be honored, numbers III, IV and VII being favored.

Miss Lee was graduated in 1913 from the University of Mississippi, and, on removing to the newer state, she took [107]
a post-graduate course at the University of Oklahoma. She made her first public appearance as a poet with Foot-notes.

Certain poems published this year by previous prize-winners deserve special mention, in the opinion of the jury: the Poems of W. B. Yeats (February); The Great Hunt and Our Prayer of Thanks, by Carl Sandburg (October); King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, by Vachel Lindsay (June); Summer Dawn, by Constance Lindsay Skinner (January); and Three Travellers Watch a Sunrise, by Wallace Stevens (July).

Besides these, the following poems receive honorable mention:

Balder, by Allen Upward (May).
1777, by Amy Lowell (August).
Epigrams, by Rabindranath Tagore (September).
Sunrise on Rydal Water, by John Drinkwater (December).
A Breton Night, by Ernest Rhys (April).
Refugees, by Grace Hazard Conkling (November).
Love-lyric, by Max Michelson (May).
Conversation Galante, by T. S. Eliot (September).
Images, by Richard Aldington (October).
Strange Meetings, by Harold Monro (September).
Charcoals, by Maxwell Bodenheim (November).
Sacrifice, by Frederic Manning (July).
Sonnets, by Wilfrid Wilson Gibson (March).
Songs, by Sara Teasdale (October).
Cross Patch, by Horace Holley (April).
Eastland Waters, by Agnes Lee (February).
Announcement of Awards

In Summer, by Clara Shanafelt (June).
On Waking, by Joseph Campbell (March).
The Lace-maker of Ypres, by G. Tucker Bispham (February).
Make No Vows, by Grace Fallow Norton (December).

CORRESPONDENCE

THE RETORT COURTEOUS

An imaginary conversation between two lady poets on the plains of Arizona, after perusing each other's manuscripts.

Said Mina Loy to Muna Lee,
"I wish your style appealed to me."
"Yours gives me anything but joy!"
Said Muna Lee to Mina Loy.

L. U.

NOTES

Mr. Robert Frost, of Franconia, N. H., is well known as the author of A Boy's Will and North of Boston. His publishers, Henry Holt & Co., will issue his new book of poems before Christmas.

Mr. Arthur Davison Ficke, of Davenport, Iowa, is also well known, his more recent books of verse being Twelve Japanese Painters (R. F. Seymour Co.), Sonnets of a Portrait Painter and The Man on the Hill-top (Kennerley). January is the date set for Mr. Ficke's new book, An April Elegy and Other Poems.

Florence Randal Livesay (Mrs. Fred L.) of Winnipeg, Manitoba, is also familiar to readers of Poetry. A book of her Ruthenian translations—or adaptations—will soon appear.

[109]
POETRY: A Magazine of Verse

Dr. William Carlos Williams, a young physician of Rutherford, N. J., has been published in Poetry since its first year. He is represented in the first imagist anthology, Des Imagistes.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ORIGINAL VERSE:
Mothers and Men, by Harold Trowbridge Pulsifer. Houghton Mifflin Co.
Greek Wayfarers and Other Poems, by Edwina Stanton Babcock. G. P. Putman's Sons.
La Première Aventure Céleste de M. Antipyrine, par Tristan Tzara.
After Hours, by Wm. Frederick Feld. Loyola Univ. Press, Chicago.
The Iron Age, by Frank Betts. B. H. Blackwell.

PLAYS:
The Tidings Brought to Mary, by Paul Claudel: translated from the French by Louise Morgan Sill. Yale Univ. Press.
King Saint Olaf, by Gustav Melby. Richard G. Badger.

PROSE:
NEW MACMILLAN POETRY

EDGAR LEE MASTERS
The Great Valley
An epic of American life in the style of Spoon River. $1.50

Spoon River Anthology
(Illustrated.)
A new edition, with new poems. Illustrated by Oliver
Herford. $2.00

AMY LOWELL
Men, Women and Ghosts
A remarkable collection of Miss Lowell's stories in verse, giving fresh demonstration of her genius. $1.25

JOHN MASEFIELD
Salt Water Poems and Ballads (Illustrated.)
A new edition, with new poems. Illustrated in colors by Charles Pears. Ask your bookseller to show you this beautiful book. $2.00

ROBINSON JEFFERS
Californians
A highly interesting work by a new poet. $1.25

RABINDRANATH
TAGORE'S Works
A beautiful new edition which contains all Tagore's previously published works and his two new books:
The Hungry Stones and Other Stories.
Fruit Gathering
Each volume in the Bolpur
Edition, 1.50
Limp Leather, $2.00

HARRIET MONROE
ALICE C. HENDERSON
The New Poetry:
An Anthology. Representative poems by many writers whose work is indicative of the renaissance in contemporary American literature. $1.50

LOUIS V. LEDOUX
The Story of Eleusis
A poetical drama of extreme beauty which will appeal alike to the lover of classical and the lover of modern dramatic poetry. $1.25

JOHN G. NEIHARDT
The Quest
A collection of Mr. Neihardt's lyrical poems. $1.25

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
New York
We specialize in Fine Table Services in English China

Fine Rock Crystal

and

Sterling Silver

Since 1838 we have supplied the homes of the leading families of the middle West with the World’s best merchandise in Fine China, Cut Crystal and Sterling Silver.

We await your inspection.

---

Burley & Company

7 North Wabash Avenue

Chicago
A Healthful Life, Mental and Physical Fitness, depend largely upon a Proper Diet

HORLICK'S
The Original Malted Milk
Is a Delicious, Nourishing and Invigorating Food-Drink.

Drink it in place of Tea or Coffee.
Use it as a Lunch between meals.
Splendid for upbuilding the system.

Ask for and get "HORLICK'S" and thus avoid substitution

HORLICK'S Malted Milk Co., Racine, Wis.

“High explosives. . . . Sound, daring, inclusive of many types in the city, and makes a contribution to American literature of emancipating influence and of permanent importance, either in itself or in its effect.” — Edgar Lee Masters, author of "The Spoon River Anthology."

“Uttering at once the challenge and the ideal with a passion rare among poets of the Anglo-Saxon stock. . . . Gives us the city in a masterpiece of portraiture.—Harriet Monroe in “Poetry.”

CARL SANDBURG’S
CHICAGO POEMS
183 pp. 12mo. $1.25 net
HENRY HOLT & COMPANY, 34 W. 33d Street, New York
THE CAUSE OF LITERATURE is served by intelligent reading as much as by intelligent writing.
Are you doing your share?

THE DIAL
aims to present to discriminating readers news and information concerning current literature and literary tendencies.
Its policy is one of fearless independence based upon sound critical thinking.

On January 1 the price advances to $3.00 the year

Until that time subscriptions will be received at the present rate of $2.00 the year.

A trial subscription for six numbers will be sent to any reader of POETRY on receipt of 25 cents.

THE DIAL PUBLISHING COMPANY
608 SOUTH DEARBORN STREET
CHICAGO
SEND TEN CENTS FOR A SAMPLE COPY OF

"THE WRITER"

the pioneer magazine for literary workers, established in 1887, and more helpful now than ever to all who write. The Writer prints each month practical articles on the methods of authorship and kindred subjects, with all the useful and interesting news of the literary and publishing worlds, including announcements of new magazines and changes among the old ones, besides answers to queries about writing, personal gossip about authors, helpful hints and suggestions for writers, reviews of new books on literary topics, and a full reference list of literary articles in current periodicals.

VALUABLE NEW FEATURES

in The Writer are "The Writer's Directory of Periodicals," which gives the addresses of publications that buy manuscripts, with information about their requirements, furnished by the editors, and the department, "The Manuscript Market," which gives timely information as to the present special needs of various periodicals, coming directly from the editors, together with announcements of manuscript prize offers. Back numbers from the beginning of publication of the Directory last November can be furnished. Monthly changes and additions keep the information up to date. Another important new feature is a department devoted to Advertisement Writing, in which an expert gives instruction and advice.

The Writer is an inspiration to its readers, gives them practical advice, helps them to do better work, and shows them where they can sell their manuscripts. The price of the magazine is ten cents a copy, or one dollar a year. Send ten cents for a sample copy, or, better yet, a dollar for a year's subscription. Address

THE WRITER PUBLISHING CO.
P. O. BOX 1905, BOSTON, MASS.
Please mention "Poetry."

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND PROFITS

$10,000,000

Savings Department Open All Day Saturday Until 8 P. M.

CORN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO
Northwest Corner LaSalle and Adams Streets
Your Favorite Book of Contemporary Poetry at a Great Reduction

SPECIAL OFFER

POETRY is happy to announce that through the courtesy of the leading publishers we are able to make the following unusual offer. It is open to anyone who sends us a subscription.

For a sum equal to the advertised price of any book of contemporary verse issued by the publishers listed below, plus $1.00, we will send you, postpaid, that book and POETRY for one year. For example, Edgar Lee Masters' "Spoon River Anthology" retails for $1.25. Add $1.00 to this and you will get the book and the subscription for $2.25.

The publishers who are co-operating with us in this offer are:

John Lane Co.               George H. Doran Co.
Mitchell Kennerley         Duffield & Co.
The Century Co.             Sherman, French & Co.
G. P. Putnam's Sons         Richard G. Badger

This is an offer you cannot afford to miss, including as it does all the most popular books of poetry of recent years, besides the new verse published this fall.

A SPLENDID CHRISTMAS OPPORTUNITY

Send your order at once to

POETRY
543 Cass St., Chicago
Padraic Colum, the distinguished Irish poet and lecturer, says: "POETRY is the best magazine, by far, in the English language. We have nothing in England or Ireland to compare with it."

William Marion Reedy, Editor of the St. Louis Mirror, says: "POETRY has been responsible for the Renaissance in that art. You have done a great service to the children of light in this country."

POETRY IS THE MOST NOTABLE PERIODICAL FOR POETS IN THE WORLD.—Everybody's Magazine.

POETRY publishes the best verse now being written in English, and its prose section contains brief articles on subjects connected with the art, also reviews of the new verse.

POETRY has introduced more new poets of importance than all the other American magazines combined, besides publishing the work of poets already distinguished.

SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE. A subscription to POETRY is the best way of paying interest on your huge debt to the great poets of the past. It encourages living poets to do for the future what dead poets have done for modern civilization, for you.

One year—12 numbers—U. S. A., $1.50; Canada, $1.65; foreign, $1.75 (7 shillings).

POETRY

543 Cass Street, Chicago.

Send POETRY for one year ($1.50 enclosed) beginning

__________________________________________

Name ___________________________________

Address __________________________________
Bound Volumes of Poetry

Complete volumes of POETRY bound in buckram with Index and Title Page

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Volume</th>
<th>Dates</th>
<th>Price</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Vol. I</td>
<td>October 1912-March 1913 (Reprint)</td>
<td>$2.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. II</td>
<td>April-September 1913</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. III</td>
<td>October 1913-March 1914</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. IV</td>
<td>April-September 1914</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. V</td>
<td>October 1914-March 1915</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. VI</td>
<td>April-September 1915</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. VII</td>
<td>September 1915-March 1916</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. VIII</td>
<td>April-September 1916</td>
<td>$1.50</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Subscribers may have their copies of POETRY bound at a cost of 75 cents a volume.

POETRY ------ 543 CASS STREET
RALPH FLETCHER SEYMOUR
FINE ARTS ELDG., CHICAGO
To have great poets there must be great audiences too.

—Whitman

Harriet Monroe
Editor

Alice Corbin Henderson
Eunice Tietjens
Associate Editors

Henry B. Fuller
Edith Wyatt
H. C. Chatfield-Taylor
Advisory Committee

Ezra Pound
Foreign Correspondent