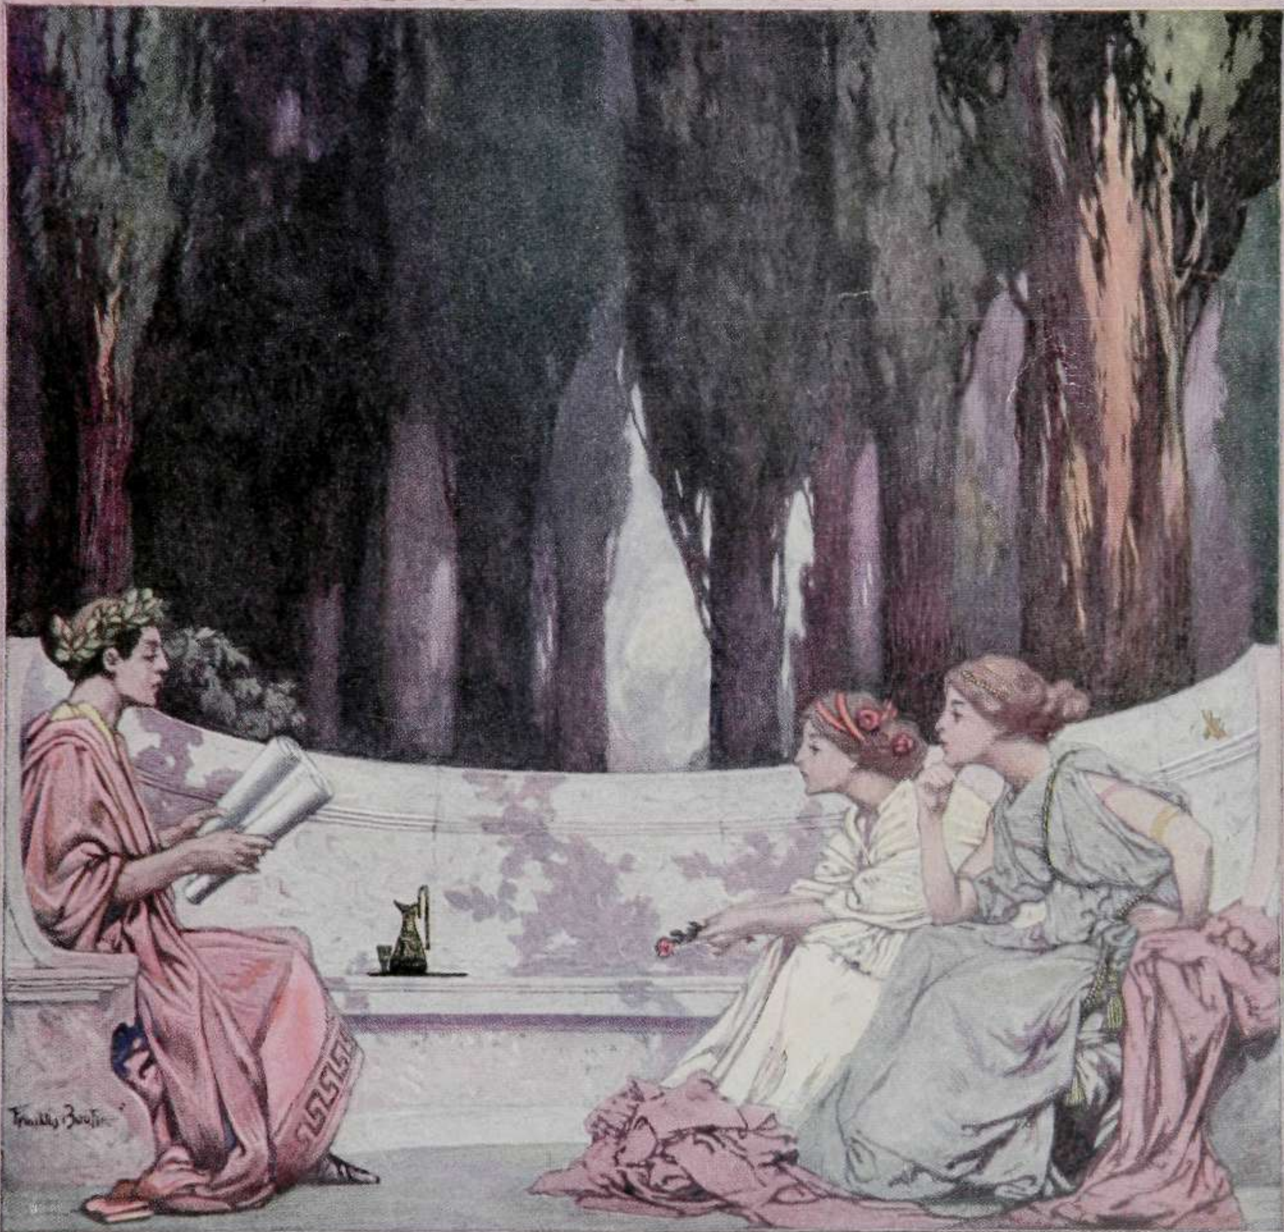
·VOL. L No. 4. OCTOBER 1911 PRICE 25 CENTS·

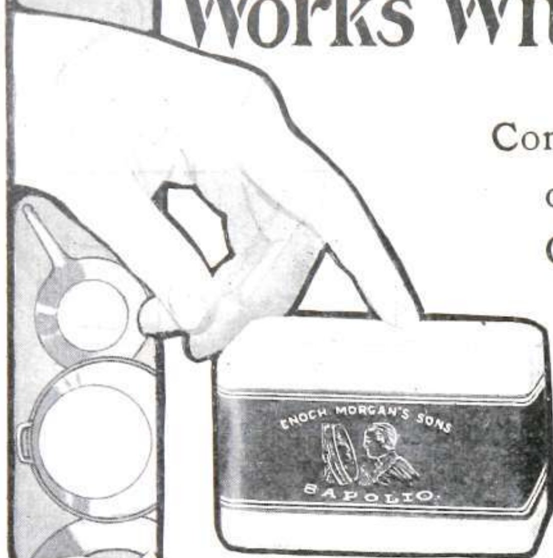
SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE



CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS NEW YORK

CHARLES SCRIBNER--PRESIDENT
ARTHUR H. SCRIBNER--TREASURER
G.R.D. SCHIEFFELIN--SECRETARY
} 153-157 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK---TEMPLE HOUSE. TEMPLE AVE. LONDON. E C.

Works Without Waste

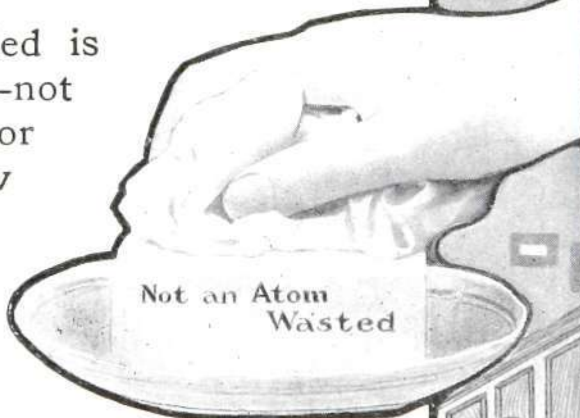


Conservation is the keynote of the times.

Conservation of energy, of money and of time is the secret of the fame of that big, solid, slow-wearing cake.

SAPOLIO

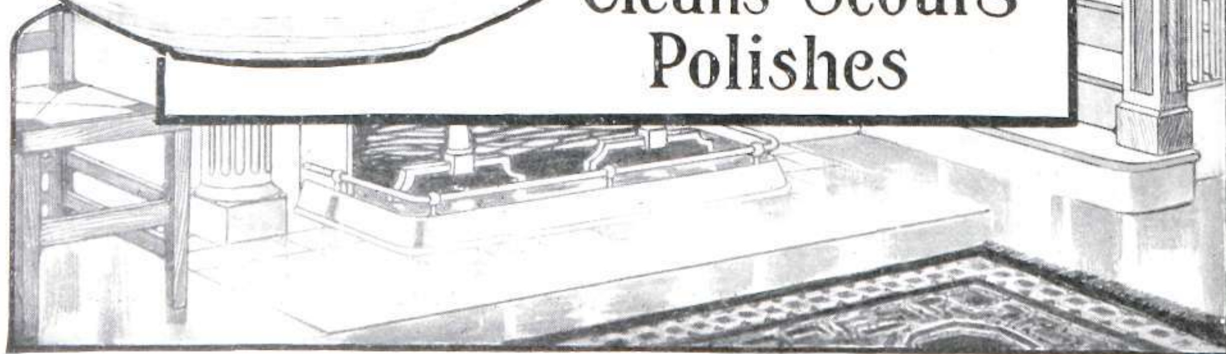
Only what is needed is used from the cake—not an atom is wasted or spilled. Notice how much more work Sapolio does and how much longer it lasts than any other cleaner.



A cake of Sapolio is so solidly compressed that it wears to a wafer. Other forms of cleaners are high cost at the start and wasteful all the time.

Does not Waste in Water

Cleans · Scours
Polishes



Vol. L. No. 4.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

OCTOBER 1911

CONTENTS

OCTOBER HUNTING. Drawing by Philip R. Goodwin, reproduced in color . . . . Frontispiece

A MODERN ST. GEORGE . . . . . . Jacob A. Riis . . . 385
THE GROWTH OF ORGANIZED CHARITY IN THE UNITED STATES. Illustrations from photographs.

THE TURNSTILE . . . . A. E. W. Mason . . . 403
CHAPTERS I-IV. (To be continued.)

A CHARACTER. Poem . . . . Brian Hooker . . . 415

THE GREATEST HORSE SHOW . . . . E. S. Nadal 416
Illustrations by Fred Pegram.

THE VALLEY OF ROCKS. Poem . . . . Gertrude H. McGiffert . 430

ETHAN FROME . . . . Edith Wharton . . . 431
CHAPTERS VIII-IX. (Concluded.)

OF ONE WHO WALKS ALONE. Poem . . Thomas S. Jones, Jr. . . 444

HAMBURG AND ITS HARBOR . . . . . Ralph D. Paine . . . 445
Illustrations from photographs.

LIFE. Quatrain . . . . Margaret Sherwood . . 459

JUSTIFICATION . . . . Gordon Hall Gerould . . 461
Illustrations by James Montgomery Flagg.

SONGS OF A SYRIAN LOVER . . . . . Clinton Scollard . . . 471

GENERAL GRANT'S LETTERS TO GENERAL BEALE . . . . U. S. Grant 472
INTRODUCTORY NOTE BY . . . . Stephen Bonsal

"FOR EAST IS EAST, AND WEST IS WEST" Mary Gay Humphreys . 480
Illustration by H. C. Wall.

FRANZ LISZT—THE REAL AND LEGENDARY James Huneker . . . 487
With a portrait.

THE MIRROR-SELF. Poem . . . . . . Edith M. Thomas . . . 495

CLEVELAND'S ADMINISTRATIONS—I . . James Ford Rhodes . . 496

THE POINT OF VIEW—The Folly of Staying At Home—The Footsteps of the Great—As to "Survivals". 505

THE FIELD OF ART—The Print—Its Charm and Its Quest. (Frank Weitenkampf.) Illustrated 509

(Colored cover designed by Franklin Booth.)

Copyright, 1911, by Charles Scribner's Sons. All rights reserved. Entered at New York Post-Office as Second-Class Mail Matter. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

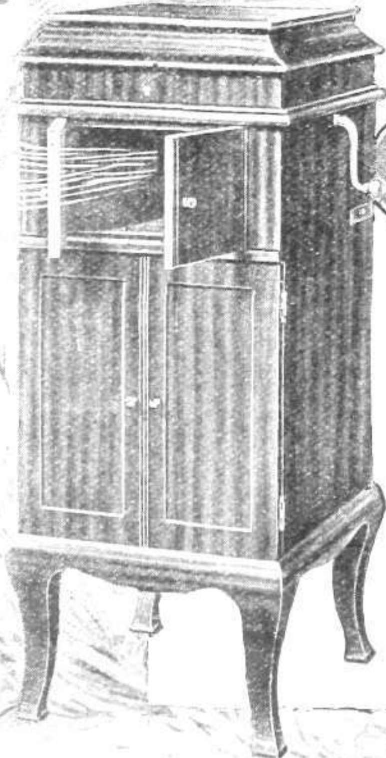
PRICE, 25 CENTS A NUMBER; $3.00 A YEAR

All the Music of All the World

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. Photos. (C) by Mishkin & Dupont

[1]NORDICA, [2]FREMSTAD, [3]MARY GARDEN, [4]ALICE NIELSEN, [5]ZENATELLO, [6]BONCI, [7]CAVALIERI, [8]CONSTANTINO, [9]LIPKOWSKA, [10]BAKLANOFF, [11]AMATO, [12]McCORMACK, [13]BONINSEGNA, [14]EMMY DESTINN, [15]SAMMARCO, [16]ANSELMI, [17]MARDONES.

Columbia Grafonola "Nonpareil" $150



Records of all these magnificent voices, and of scores of others, may be purchased of Columbia dealers. Many of them nowhere else; for they are now singing under exclusive contracts with the

Columbia
Phonograph Co.

Columbia Records may be played on any disc instrument, and are better in surface, tone and durability than any others, and so guaranteed to you.

Columbia Grafonolas from $50 up to $200. Graphophones, $17.50 to $100. New catalogs of Columbia instruments and records of any Columbia dealer, or from us by mail.

COLUMBIA PHONOGRAPH CO., Gen'l,
Box 207 Tribune Bldg., New York

LONDON: EARLSFIELD, S.W.

Exclusive selling rights granted to dealers where we are not actively represented.

Index to Advertisements

On this and the following page will be found each month a list of all advertisements in the issue. Alphabetically arranged and grouped under special headings you have here, for instant reference, the names of products of the best manufacturers in the country.

Building—Furnishing—Garden

	PAGE
Amer. Telephone & Telegraph Co.	57
Bissell's Carpet Sweeper	60
Collette Mfg. Co.	60
Cornell Sectional Buildings	60
Crapo Italian Linens	71
Crex Carpet Co.	62
B. H. Farr—Nurseries	66
Fiske & Co., Tapestry Brick	73
General Electric Co., Lamps	65
Hartshorn Shade Rollers	60
Horsford's Hardy Plants	70
Landers, Frary & Clark	62
William Leavens Furniture	70
Macbeth-Evans Glass Co.	71
National Fireproofing Co.	67
National Lead Co.	64
New Jersey Zinc Co.	66
Ostermoor Mattress	63
Rogers Brothers Silverware	77
Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co.	93
Streit Mfg. Co., Furniture	64
Tiffany & Co.	53
R. Wallace Silverware	61
The Weir Stove Co.	68
Witt's Ash and Garbage Cans	77

Musical Instruments

	PAGE
Columbia Phonograph	2
The Everett Piano	88
Kranich & Bach Player Piano	69
Steinway Piano	54
Tel-Electric Piano Player	5
Victor-Victrola	50–51
Wilcox & White Co.—Angelus	90

Office Appliances and Stationery

	PAGE
H. Bainbridge & Co.—Pens	76
Baker-Vawter Co.—Filing Sections	75
Esterbrook Steel Pens	52
Neostyle Company	74
Spencerian Steel Pens	74
"Swan Safety" Fountain Pen	77

Food Products

	PAGE
Apenta	82
Baker's Breakfast Cocoa	4th cover
G. H. Brinkler—Food Expert	82
Consumers Fish Co.	84
Cresca Delicacies	82
F. E. Davis Fish Co.	82
Evans' Ale	85
Horlick's Malted Milk	82
Huyler's Cocoa	85
Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes	49
Lea & Perrins Sauce	87
Libby's Food Products	3d cover
Malt-Nutrine	83
Mellin's Food Co.	84
Occident Flour	89
Peter's Chocolate	44
Pleasant Valley Wine Co.	86
Post Toasties	59
Postum	55
Sen-Sen Chiclet Co.	86
Shredded Wheat	48
White Rock	85
Whitman's Candies	88
Wilbur's Chocolate Buds	87

Books, Magazines, etc.

	PAGE
American Magazine	25
The Architectural Record	20
Book Supply Co.	16
Century Co.	8–9
Cosmopolitan Magazine	22–23
The Craftsman, House Plans	60
Curtis & Cameron, Copley Prints	25
Dodd, Mead & Co.	17
H. K. Dugdale Co.—Songs	74
Harper & Bros.	10–11–12
Houghton-Mifflin Co.	13
International Accountants' Society	74
Ladies' Home Journal	14–15, 16a–16b
John Lane Pub. Co.	19
Life	21
National Sportsman Magazine	25
Outing Magazine	20
Scientific American	18
Charles Scribner's Sons	26–35
Scribner's Magazine Agency	24
Scribner's Magazine Notes	45–46
F. A. Stokes Pub. Co.	7

For announcement of the November number see page 6

Index to Advertisements—Continued

Articles of Wear

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
American Woolen Co.	94	Hart, Schaffner & Marx	95	Paris Garters	80
Boston Garters	76	Knox Hat	79	Revillon Frères—Furs	80a
Duofold Health Underwear	80a	Krementz Collar Button	52	Wright's Health Underwear Co.	80
Fownes Gloves	78	Larter & Sons—Shirt Studs	76

Automobiles and Accessories

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Baker Electrics	81	Oldsmobile	80g	Stevens-Duryea	80e
Goodrich Tires	80h	Pope-Hartford	80f

Travel—Resorts—Tours

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Bankers Trust Co.	80b	De Potter Tours	80b	Raymond & Whitcomb Tours	80b
F. C. Clark Tours	80b	Hamburg-American Line	80c–80d	Temple Tours	80b
Collver Tours	80b	Dr. & Mrs. H. S. Paine—Tours	80b	White Star Line	80d

Miscellaneous

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Barker's Physical Culture	80	U. S. Playing Card Co.	77	Ivory Soap	96
W. F. & J. Barnes—Lathes	74	Winchester Arms Co.		Mennen's Borated Talcum	76
Victor J. Evans, Patents	74	Proprietary Articles		Pearline	52
Gillette Safety Razor	91	Cuticura Soap	72	Prophylactic Tooth Brush	58
Kryptok Lenses	56	Electro-Silicon	70	Sapolio	2d cover
Star Safety Razor	72	Fairy Soap	47	Schools and Colleges
				See pages	36–43

The Advertising pages in Scribner's Magazine are peculiarly interesting. The cleverness and inventiveness shown in the preparation of advertising copy, the assured integrity of the advertisers, the great variety of things advertised, the very make-up of the advertising section with its numerous Departments under which advertisements of similar character are grouped together, gives them an alluring effectiveness which will take Scribner readers all the way through.

Scribner's Magazine is practically alone in the arrangement and classification of its advertising pages. The marked advantage of our plan to readers and advertisers alike becomes more apparent each month.

Test the real service of our department classification for yourself. Compare the general order of the advertising pages in Scribner's Magazine with the pages of any other magazine you read. Let us know the result.

For announcement of the November number see page 6

The TEL-ELECTRIC PIANO PLAYER

The Wild Melody of Martial Music

THERE is nothing so stimulating to the jaded nerves as the weird strains of impassioned martial music.

The crash of the attack—the desperate resistance—the clattering, clanking rush of cavalry—the resounding deep-throated song of the artillery—the sharp staccato rattle of musketry—the clash of steel on steel—the mad melodious cheer of victory.

All of these minor motifs woven together in a cloth of inspiring heart-throbbing melody, lies dormant in your piano until awakened into life by the wonderful Tel-Electric Piano Player.

None but the world-famed virtuoso, and he only in his most brilliant moments, can equal its exquisite interpretation of the varied masterpieces of the great masters of harmony.

From the thundering call to arms to the drowsy lullaby, the repertory of the

Tel-Electric Piano Player

is remarkably complete. The man-constructed "mind" of this marvelous instrument expresses perfectly every shade of meaning—every haunting thread of melody motif—yet at the touch of a lever it is entirely under your control, for your individual interpretation.

Exclusive Tel-Electric Features

It can be attached to any piano. It requires no pumping.

It plays from the keys but does not obstruct the Keyboard. Electric current unnecessary.

It enables you to play your piano from a distance.

Any piano with a Tel-Electric attached, costs less than a player-piano of the same grade.

Its music rolls are indestructible but cost no more than others.

It is wonderful. It is perfection.

Send for catalog.

Set of four beautiful photogravures like above illustration, size 11 x 15, suitable for framing, will be sent prepaid for ten cents in stamps.

The Tel-Electric Company.

BRANCHES CHICAGO BOSTON

TEL-ELECTRIC BUILDING
299 Fifth Avenue.
New York City

AGENCIES IN ALL LARGE CITIES

In the November Scribner

NOTHING that Gen. Frederick Funston has written is more replete with dramatic interest than the story he will tell in this number of "The Capture of Emilio Aguinaldo." For sheer adventure and absorbing plot it would be hard to match it in any romance by Dumas.

Thomas Nelson Page will write of "General Lee and the Confederate Government." This is a most important and interesting contribution to the history of the war between the States, and it will give a new impression of the tremendous difficulties that beset and handicapped the great Confederate General in his relations with the administration.

A second article on Cleveland's Administrations, by JAMES FORD RHODES, deals with his attitude on the Silver Question and the Venezuela Boundary Dispute.

RALPH D. PAINE describes The Great Port of London River. The wonderful waterway from London Bridge to the sea. Illustrated.

MADAME WADDINGTON has written An Impression of Coronation Week, an intimate personal impression of the scenes and the many notable people she had the privilege of knowing and meeting.

Fox and Drag Hunting in the United States is the subject of artist HENRY R. POORE'S article which will be illustrated by his own paintings, a number of them in color.

The second instalment of A. E. W. MASON'S fascinating serial The Turnstile. The story opens with a dramatic earthquake in the Argentine and then shifts to England.

Two unusual stories: John Flint, Deputy Chief, by LAWRENCE PERRY—the story of a fireman. A Mail-Order Cowboy, by Lieut. HUGH JOHNSON.

By the author of "The Garden of Allah"

THE

FRUITFUL VINE

By ROBERT HICHENS

This important long novel by the man who has been called the greatest living writer of English has a double distinction:

Its setting: Modern Rome with her heroic memories and her fascinating society—the Italian nobility, the brilliant diplomats, and the rich and cultured of all nations;

Its theme: the unsatisfied longing for children on the part of a mutually devoted couple—a beautiful Englishwoman of the finest type and her distinguished husband. How this want forces them through strength, weakness, blindness, circumstance, good and evil to the dramatic climax, is told in a story that is profoundly moving.

By his interpretation of human longing and motive, by the glowing color of his description, and by his tremendous dramatic power, Mr. Hichens in turn fascinates, charms, and almost stuns the reader.

With frontispiece in colors by Jules Guérin. Cloth, 12mo, $1.40 net; postpaid $1.53

PANDORA'S BOX

By John A. Mitchell

Author of "Amos Judd," "The Pines of Lory," etc.

THE romance of an American architect and the daughter of a line of earls stretching back to the Conqueror, told in a vein of mystery, of exquisite humor and gentle satire by the distinguished editor of Life. It is a book of genuine feeling, of interesting plot, and of decidedly pleasant manner.

With four illustrations by the author. Cloth, 12mo, $1.30 net; postpaid $1.42

THE SECRET GARDEN

By Frances Hodgson Burnett

A story with the tenderness and charm of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the imagination and power of "The Dawn of a To-morrow," and the dramatic suspense of "The Shuttle"—all the qualities which have made Mrs. Burnett the most beloved American story teller. $1.35 net; postpaid $1.47

"Of all the dear, delightful books of the season, 'The Secret Garden' is the dearest and delightfullest. It is worth reading, every line of it."—PHILADELPHIA EVENING TELEGRAPH.

SHERWOOD—Robin Hood and the Three Kings

By ALFRED NOYES, Author of "Drake," "The Enchanted Island," etc.

A poem-drama in five acts, based on the Robin Hood legend, full of swift action, high romantic color, and poetry both delicate and strong, by the foremost of England's younger poets.

With four illustrations in color by Spencer B. Nichols. Cloth, 8vo, $1.75 net; postpaid $1.88

Publishers FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY New York

A Tale of Love and Golf

TODDIE

By GILBERT WATSON

There is much quaint fun in this out-of-the-ordinary romance, an occasional mist in the eyes, much humanness—it is an altogether whimsical and captivating romance.

Frontispiece in color by Vosburg

12mo, 300 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 12 cents

Medieval Romance and Modern Socialism

THORPE'S WAY

By MORLEY ROBERTS

And the clever blending of the two is done with a certain buoyant humor that keeps the reader stimulated and amused.

12mo, 374 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 12 cents

A Story of Love's Fairy-land

MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE

By ELEANOR HALLOWELL ABBOTT

"Molly Make-Believe" was Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's first book, though her short stories had attracted much attention. Published September 24, 1910, Molly's success was immediate; and the demand for this little gem of a love story has necessitated an average of a large edition a month since issue.

Clever pictures. 16mo, 211 pages. Price $1.00 net, postage 8 cents

"A Patriotic Love Story"

AN ARDENT AMERICAN

By MRS. RUSSELL CODMAN

The Congregationalist calls it: "A bit of charming embroidery upon the contrasts of our American life, worked by a cunning hand."

Unusual illustrations. 12mo, 411 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 12 cents

By the Author of "The Garden of Allah"

THE DWELLER ON THE THRESHOLD

By ROBERT HICHENS

A tale of transferred personality rather than of double personality—"a grim kind of tale, made more so by the author's superb handling of his theme and characters."

12mo, 273 pages. Price $1.10 net, postage 10 cents

A Love Story of Old New York

MISS LIVINGSTON'S COMPANION

By MARY DILLON, author of "The Rose of Old St. Louis," "In Old Bellaire," etc.

A background of historic characters and incidents, a romance of much fresh charm, all of the pages lighted by lively imagination and sympathy—it is a book which "will rank with the best of American novels."

Charming illustrations. 12mo, 434 pages. Price $1.30 net, postage 13 cents

"The Story of the Spiritualization of an Ironmaster"

JOHN SHERWOOD, IRONMASTER

By DR. S. WEIR MITCHELL, author of "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker," "The Guillotine Club," etc.

"The book is another proof that sane and quiet realism in the hand of a master may be as fascinating and heart-stirring as a fanciful romance."

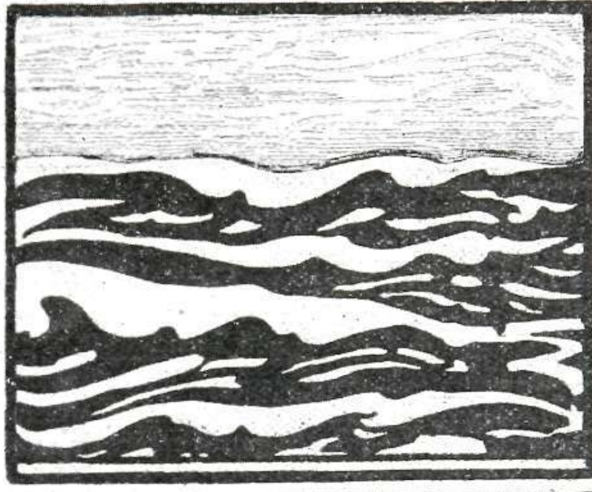
12mo, 316 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 12 cents

THE CENTURY CO. UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

The

SICK-A-BED-LADY

Eleanor Hallowell Abbott



The New Book
by the Author of
MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE

Everywhere, $1.30 net.

THE CENTURY CO., NEW YORK

JANE DAWSON

WILL N. HARBEN

MR. HARBEN once more portrays the typical Georgia rural community with all its picturesqueness and homely charm. Jane Dawson, the heroine, was betrayed in her youth by a man who has since married another. Her neighbors make her feel her disgrace, but, being a woman of vigorous mind, she rises above circumstances. The story is one of that rare kind in which religious sentiment is a real, vital, human factor.

With Frontispiece. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.30 net

MISS GIBBIE GAULT

KATE LANGLEY BOSHER

"Like Mary Cary this book stands for the winning power of love."—New Orleans Picayune.

"To read a book like this is like taking a sunbath."—Boston Herald.

"Of such pure gold that it recalls the best tales that Miss Alcott has left us to make the world better."—Portland Oregonian.

With Frontispiece. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.20 net

KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE

IRVING BACHELLER

"'Keeping Up With Lizzie' is one of the greatest American books ever written. It is having an almost sensational success."—Boston Globe.

"Irving Bacheller never wrote a jollier or a truer story than the shrewd commentary on human nature and American life called 'Keeping Up With Lizzie.'"—Detroit Journal.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00 net

PADRE IGNACIO

OWEN WISTER

PADRE IGNACIO, once of the gay world, has found contentment in renunciation. Temptation to return to the world becomes so strong that he is on the point of deserting his post. His story is one of the heart-warming kind. Illustrated. 16mo, Pictorial Cover, 50 cents net

COMRADES

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS

A LITTLE catch in the throat and the tear of sympathy will follow the reading of this beautiful tale of one member of the G. A. R. post and his comrade.

Illustrated. 16mo, Pictorial Cover, 50 cents net

SOME CHEMICAL PROBLEMS of TO-DAY

ROBERT KENNEDY DUNCAN

Author of "The Chemistry of Commerce"

IN this important new book Professor Duncan clearly shows the direction to-day of chemical invention away from the purely scientific domain of the laboratory into the wider fields of every-day problems. The value of the research chemist to manufacturers in numerous fields is emphasized. In Chapter XII, which is a report made by the author to the Chancellor of the University of Kansas, at the request of the Governor of that State, "On the Relations of the University of Wisconsin to the State," Professor Duncan explains what far-reaching results follow the commissions, extension lectures, and correspondence courses.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2.00 net

A LIVING WITHOUT A BOSS

ANONYMOUS

FORTY years behind him; the human machine wearing out under strenuous office work; and two mouths to feed—that is the hell that thousands of men face daily. This is the problem which confronted the author, and his experiences form a valuable human document. Here is no account of youthful inexperience and ignorant hopes, but the trained mind, and the quick eye for an opening of the city man turned into new channels. The reader is sure to find sign-posts to a safe abiding-place as his own master.

Eight Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00 net

HARPER & BROTHERS

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

By

REX BEACH

Author of "The Silver Horde"

THE boy had a fight on his hands that night when he was whirled from Broadway to 'tween-decks of a Panama boat—and the fight had only begun. He was a young American and a reckless idler at the beginning, which gives the novel its title. And the fight went on—in fact, it grew. It became a different kind of struggle, and into it all the flotsam and jetsam of the Isthmus were drawn.

The boy got some help—the hands that were stretched out to help him were mostly slender and white—and some boosts, but a lot of hard knocks as well. It took some time, and there was much fun for the spectators. Finally the boy became a man—the kind of a man who can do things.

Illustrated by Christy

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.25 net

THE IRON WOMAN

By

MARGARET DELAND

LIKE its predecessor, "The Iron Woman" is a novel of spiritual struggle and deep human emotion — but it rises to an even greater height than "The Awakening of Helena Richie." The story is compact and swiftly moving. From beginning to end its human appeal never flags, and, despite the touches of profound pathos, it has a wholesome sanity and cheerful every-dayness that reminds one of the "Old Chester Tales." Never was youth — dainty, virginal, dewy youth — youth with its latent passion, so vividly pictured. No serial ever published in Harper's Magazine brought forth the favorable comment of so many people.

Illustrated

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.35 net

VICTOR OLLNEE'S DISCIPLINE

HAMLIN GARLAND

VICTOR OLLNEE, a healthy, normal youth, catcher of the university baseball team, learns that his mother, whom he had seen but little since his childhood, is a famous medium. Lucy Ollnee is a delicate, refined little woman, who has perfect faith in her unusual psychic powers. Victor determines to make her break away from her profession, and the story works out the destiny of the boy, his sweetheart, and his mother in chapters of strong and simple feeling.

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.30 net

NOBODY'S

VIRGINIA DEMAREST

THE love story of a beautiful and refined Southern girl who, as she grows up, faces an alarming situation regarding her birth. Mystery, suspense, and the skill with which the colored people are drawn in their superstition and timorous instinct for concealment, make "Nobody's" an unusual novel.

With Frontispiece. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.20 net

THE NINE-TENTHS

JAMES OPPENHEIM

TAKE an easy-going, fairly successful business man and pull the world down about his ears. Mr. Oppenheim's Joe lives in New York. The real quality of the man is laid bare when a fire sweeps through his building, and he feels himself responsible for the girls who worked on the floor above. Joe and his mother go down among the poor to live. Joe seeks to wield an influence through the paper which he establishes and edits. He and his work become a center for factory workers, shirtwaist-makers, and even for the wealthy who are interested in humanity. It is a story of genuine human appeal and meaning.

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.25 net

HARPER & BROTHERS

HARPER'S for October

An American Woman in the Paris Commune

Madame de Hegermann-Lindencrone, whose letters descriptive of her visits to the Court of Napoleon III. have attracted such attention in the pages of HARPER'S, now writes of an even more dramatic period of her life—her experiences in Paris during the Commune. Into these letters come the famous men—statesmen, poets, painters, soldiers, and revolutionary leaders whom she knew personally.

Tracking Up the Rio Negro

CASPER WHITNEY is an explorer who has the faculty of making the reader see things as he saw them. This account of his recent expedition up the Rio Negro, unaccompanied except by natives, is a narrative of remarkable experience and daring adventure.

A Boy Spy in the Civil War

Among the remarkable narratives of spies in our Civil War which WILLIAM GILMORE BEYMER has contributed to HARPER'S, none is so unique as this. For here the spy was a boy, who went among the enemy's troops and through their lines, carrying information which Grant himself prized. And he escaped unscathed and is alive to-day.

New York—City of Towers

The problem of the modern office building is one which has given the greatest architects food for study. How to combine practical utility and artistic beauty has been the question. MILDRED STAPLEY writes most interestingly on this subject and a French etcher has made a notable series of plates reproduced in tint.

The Education of Daughters

HELEN HAY WILSON traces the position of women from the early days down to the present day, showing that some intellectual training is obviously helpful, indeed indispensable, to the woman who is going to do serious work.

7 Unusual Short Stories

Among the authors are included many of the best-known American and English writers of to-day: James B. Connolly, Mrs. Henry Dudeney, Melville D. Post, and Lucy Pratt.

Margaret Deland's great serial, "THE IRON WOMAN."

Published September 16

"The Book of American Motherhood"

Mother Carey's Chickens

By Kate Douglas Wiggin

Mrs. Wiggin has here created the ideal American mother, just as in "Rebecca" she created "the nicest child in American literature."

Readers of all ages and all tastes will love Mother Carey and sympathize with her in her trials and rejoice in her victories.

Mary E. Wilkins Freeman says: "I quite agree with the author that it fully equals Rebecca in its appeal to the heart."

Hamilton Wright Mabie says it is "an entertaining and thoroughly inspiriting story."

Illustrated by Alice Barber Stephens. $1.25 net. Postage 12 cents.

New Fiction

HER ROMAN LOVER — By Eugenia Brooks Frothingham

An Italian romance of an American girl by the author of "The Turn of the Road." Illustrated by Alice Barber Stephens. $1.25 net. Postage 12 cents.

IN THE SHADOW OF ISLAM — By Demetra Vaka

An absorbing novel of the young Turk movement by the author of "Haremlik." Illustrated. $1.25 net. Postage 12 cents.

Important New Books

SHORT-BALLOT PRINCIPLES — By Richard S. Childs

A timely book dealing with one of the most important of contemporary political reforms. $1.00 net. Postage extra.

PAY-DAY — By C. Hanford Henderson

An eloquent appeal for a radical readjustment of the relations of men, educationally and industrially. $1.50 net. Postage extra.

WHY WE MAY BELIEVE IN LIFE AFTER DEATH — By Charles E. Jefferson

An unusually satisfactory discussion of the subject of Immortality. $1.00 net. Postage extra.

BRET HARTE — By Henry C. Merwin

A narrative of Harte's life in California, in the Eastern States, and in Europe, of remarkable freshness, fullness, and interest. Illustrated. $3.00 net. Postage extra.

AN AMERICAN RAILROAD BUILDER: J. M. FORBES — By H. G. Pearson

The remarkable career of John M. Forbes while engaged in railroad construction in the Middle West in the middle of the last century. With portrait. $1.25 net. Postage extra.

LETTERS OF SARAH ORNE JEWETT — Edited by Mrs. James T. Fields

These letters present a picture of the writer's life that will be of profound interest. With portraits. $1.50 net. Postage extra.

New Fall Bulletin sent FREE on request

Boston HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY New York

There Are Two Millionaires Among The Actors

One can go to bed and sleep and yet earn $1000 a week. The other has made $300,000 in one season.

There is also an actress who earns for herself a quarter of a million dollars in one season: who has played to over a million dollars in Chicago alone. She is the greatest money-making actress on the stage.

Another actress earns $600,000 in a single season.

Haven't you sometimes been curious to know the weekly salary paid to such actresses as Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore, Julia Marlowe, Annie Russell, Billie Burke, and what they earn besides?

It is now all told—and from authoritative figures—in one article, "What The Actors Really Earn," and the profits and salaries are truly amazing.

In the October LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

15 Cents Everywhere

The Men We Love and The Men We Marry

Are there generally two men in a woman's life — the man she loves and the man she marries?

A woman, keenly observant, and who has seen much of girls and women, holds that it is more often true than many suppose. Then she explains how it comes about: what it can mean, in suffering, to a woman, and what is the duty of a woman to be the wife of the man she married, not that of the man she wishes she had married.

A thoroughly feminine article is this. Men will not understand it, but women will

It is in the October LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

15 Cents Everywhere

A Present-Day Story of Reclamation

A New Novel by Harold Bell Wright, Author of

"That Printer of Udell's" "The Shepherd of the Hills" and "The Calling of Dan Matthews"

THE WINNING OF BARBARA WORTH

SECOND EDITION 250th THOUSAND

The Illustrations, secured at great cost, made on the scenes of the story by Mr. F. Graham Cootes, are Six in number with the addition of Jacket in Colors

Cloth, 12mo, 512 Pages, $1.30 Net

¶ The Winning of Barbara Worth is different from any novel the author has heretofore done, but it is somewhat after the style of The Shepherd of the Hills. The three elements of strength—"motive power," "story power," and "thought power"—that each of his other three novels in turn so distinctively possess, are combined in this latest story.

Other Novels by Mr. Wright
Bound in uniform style with above

Illustrated, 12mo, Cloth
Each $1.50

That Printer of Udell's
The Shepherd of the Hills
The Calling of Dan Matthews

¶ The Winning of Barbara Worth is another star in the author's crown of success and the brightest of them all.

¶ As clean a story as man ever wrote—a story with big incidents, strong people, high ideals and the Spirit of the West.

¶ A story of desert life and the national reclamation work with a sane, wholesome message as broad as humanity itself—The Ministry of Capital.

Philadelphia Dispatch—"The secret of his power is the same God-given secret that inspired Shakespeare and upheld Dickens."

Oregon Journal, Portland—"It is this almost clairvoyant power of reading the human soul that has made Mr. Wright's books among the most remarkable works of the present age."

¶ Mouth to Mouth Advertising has made Harold Bell Wright the most popular living author because his books "make good." By special arrangement 250,000 copies of "The Calling of Dan Matthews," the most widely discussed book in the world, have been published in the Popular Edition. Harold Bell Wright's Ozark "Life Stories," That Printer of Udell's, The Shepherd of the Hills and The Calling of Dan Matthews are all now published in the Popular Edition and are For Sale Wherever Books Are Sold. ¶ The Winning of Barbara Worth for wholesomeness, plot, clear analysis, vitality to our national life, love story and literature combined, is the biggest novel ever issued from any American press and is published in one edition only. The Winning of Barbara Worth Will Not be published in the popular edition.

The Uncrowned King

An Allegory (not a novel)

New York Tribune—"It embodies the aspiration, civic and moral, of the present day."
Grand Rapids Herald—"It is the greatest story since Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress.'"
Omaha World-Herald—"It is a classic in nature and spirit and rendering."
Buffalo Evening News—"It represents dreams of artistic magnificence."

Frontispiece and Ten Illustrations in Color by John Rea Neill. Over 100 pages. 16mo (4¾x7). Bound in Red and Gold—Cloth, 75 Cents Net. Full Leather, Gilt Top. Boxed, $1.25 Net

Mr. Wright's Books Are For Sale Wherever Books Are Sold

Or Send Your Order to the Publishers—The Book Supply Company

BOOK CATALOG FREE

Our mammoth catalog, size 8½x5½ inches, advertises books of all the publishers at big savings. Bibles, Periodicals, etc. Write us for it today. Bargains on every page. Books on all subjects. Hundreds of Fine Sets and Fine Bindings for your library. Every book carried in stock. Orders filled promptly. Great reductions. Big savings. Catalog sent postage prepaid, free on request. A quarter million buyers testify to the advantages we offer. Every purchaser a satisfied customer. We want your orders. Our prices are convincing. Unequaled service for handling Public, Private and School Library orders.

THE BOOK SUPPLY COMPANY, Publishers and Booksellers

ESTABLISHED 1895 E. W. REYNOLDS, President 231-233 West Monroe St., CHICAGO

An American Evening Hat

Designed by N. F. Morrill

This is the way The Ladies' Home Journal is now giving its fashions. 12 pages in full color, of fashions, needlework and interior decoration are in the October number. 15 cents a copy

©

For a Young Girl's Party

Designed by Rowena Rice and Edith M. Burtis

This is the way The Ladies' Home Journal is now giving its fashions. 12 pages in full color, of fashions, needlework and interior decoration are in the October number. 15 cents a copy

©

THE NEWEST BOOKS

You may find JUST THE BOOK you want for yourself, or a friend, by consulting this page

MY LIFE

The Autobiography of

RICHARD WAGNER

One of the great, if not the greatest book of this generation, worthy to take its place side by side with the world's immortal biographies. The mere publication of an autobiography of a man of Wagner's rank would be a great event even though it were a conventional and dull production; but MY LIFE "tells one of the most thrilling and dramatic stories in the history of modern art."—Springfield Republican.

"Will rank among the great autobiographies of literature. . . . The world will not willingly let die such a work as this."—N. Y. Sun.

Two volumes, large 8vo. Boxed, $8.50 net. Expressage extra

FICTION

THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST

Novelized from the play by

DAVID BELASCO

Every one has heard of this absorbing love story which Blanche Bates has acted and Caruso has sung before thousands.

Every one will want to read the book.

Illus. 12mo. $1.25 net

MARY MIDTHORNE

The New Novel

By GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

Author of GRAUSTARK, etc.

Again a new novel by George Barr McCutcheon—an author who has written a novel a year for the last dozen years, not one of which has failed to take its place among the best sellers. In "Mary Midthorne" the style is McCutcheon's, the inimitable art of story-telling that can turn every-day life into absorbing romance is McCutcheon's, but the scenes and the plot are wholly new.

Illustrated in color. 12mo. $1.25 net

INITIALS ONLY

By

ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

Author of "The Leavenworth Case," etc.

A remarkable story of a strange crime, a cunning criminal and a wonderful detective by the author of a long list of very popular detective stories.

Illus. 12mo. $1.30 net

By MARGARET MAYO

Author of "Polly of the Circus"

BABY MINE

Just as clever and screamingly funny as the play. Illustrated. Small 12mo. $1.00 net

DOWN OUR WAY

By Lilla Hall Smith

Woven around a shrewd, homely, humorous, and human figure runs a very sweet and genuine story.

Illus. 12mo. $1.20 net

A MAID OF OLD NEW YORK

By Amelia E. Barr

Another of Mrs. Barr's delightful romances of old-time New York, like "The Bow of Orange Ribbon" and "The Maid of Maiden Lane."

Illus. 12mo. $1.25 net

THEIR HEART'S DESIRE

By Frances Foster Perry

Just the story of a motherless little boy, and how his craving for a mother's love brings two true lovers together.

Illus. 12mo. $1.00 net

WALLY

By Guy Steely

A story of the West which is just as big and breezy and human and lovable as a really good Western story ought to be.

Illustrated. 12mo. $1.25 net

BELLES-LETTRES

AGLAVAINE AND SELYSETTE

A Drama in Five Acts

By MAURICE MAETERLINCK

Judged by critics to mark an advance in the work of the Belgian Shakespeare, even over such an exquisite piece of literature as "The Treasure of the Humble."

12mo. $1.25 net

MONA

A Drama, by BRIAN HOOKER

This is the libretto of the opera which won the prize of $10,000 offered by the Metropolitan Opera Co. for the best opera by American composers.

12mo. $1.25 net

DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY

443 Fourth Avenue New York

S.

10-11

Dodd, Mead & Co., N. Y. Please send me your circular describing MY LIFE, The Autobiography of RICHARD WAGNER.

Name..............................

Address..............................

....

Billiard Balls and Buttermilk

It isn't especially important that science has found a way of utilizing a beverage for making billiard balls, or records upon which Caruso's voice can be preserved, but they illustrate two of a hundred uses that have been found for the new commodity. And maybe it affects your business, directly or indirectly.

Also, it is but one development of thousands that are in process that will change the history of the world.

These things you must know if you are really going to live, to be a part of conscious life.

For sixty-seven years a journal has devoted itself to recording weekly the important, the necessary, the significant in creative development—and with the stamp of authority.

This journal is the Scientific American.

It has occupied a unique place in American progress. It has told with technical accuracy, but with simple clearness, the things that have made the real history of the world.

To-day it is bigger, broader, more important, more necessary to the man of affairs than ever it was.

Maybe you would like to read some anecdotes, very true tales they are, that have to do with some beginnings of very great achievements. The only thing they have to commend them is that they are very interesting. You may have "Ten Stories" for the asking.

Munn & Co., Incorporated
361 Broadway
New York

LOCKE'S GREAT NOVEL

THE GLORY OF CLEMENTINA

Fixed Price, $1.30. Postage, 12 cents

The happiest and most widely read book of the season, written by a really great novelist.

The DANGEROUS AGE

By KARIN MICHAELIS. Cloth, $1.20 net. Postage, 12 cents. Europe has gone mad over The Dangerous Age. "The most sincere, the most complete, the most humble and the most disquieting feminine confession that has ever been written," writes the eminent French critic, Marcel Prévost.

POMANDER WALK

By LOUIS N. PARKER. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage, 12 cents. Novelized by the author of the delightful play of the same name which was one of the successes of the past dramatic season. A picture of one of the quaint out-of-the-way corners of London of the olden times.

The INNOCENCE of FATHER BROWN

By GILBERT K. CHESTERTON. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage, 12 cents. These detective stories are of the dashing and brilliant kind that Stevenson invented—exciting tales told in artistic manner by a first-class literary hand.

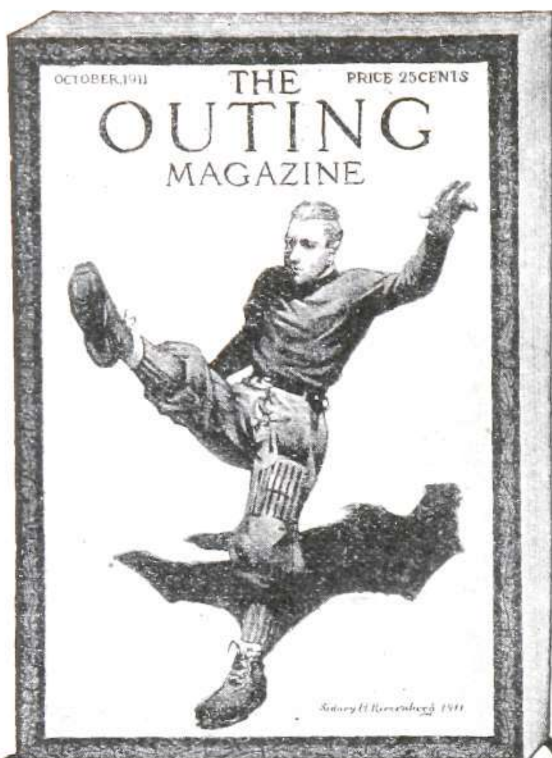
TALK of the TOWN

By MRS. JOHN LANE, author of "According to Maria," etc. Cloth, $1.25 net. Postage, 12 cents.
Delightful chats on various subjects, showing power of observation and keen insight into matters of every-day life.

AWAKENING

By MAUD DIVER, author of "Candles in the Wind," etc. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage, 12 cents. An appealing story of a Hindu girl of high caste and her married life amongst her English husband's relatives in England.

JOHN LANE CO. NEW YORK



¶ There's plenty of outdoor excitement, pleasure and helpfulness in the October OUTING—the best there is in out-door living.

¶ There's THE RANCH by Stewart Edward White; THE TOLL OF THE STRAITS and THE POLAR BEAR AT CLOSE RANGE.

¶ THE UNEXPECTED IN FOOTBALL and a dozen or so other live articles for dog lovers, motorists, hunters, etc.—good subjects for all sorts of out-door men.

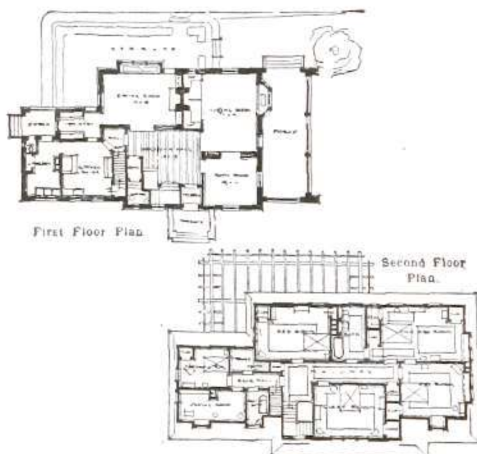
¶ A six-months' trial subscription for new readers $1.00. All news-stands 25 cents; $2.50 a year. Liberal terms to local representatives. Write for terms.

OUTING PUBLISHING COMPANY

THE OUTING MAGAZINE — 315 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY — OUTING HANDBOOKS

Important to Those Who Expect to Build

When planning to build, you will find it of great value to first make a careful personal study of the illustrations of houses, etc., that have been designed and built by a number of leading architects, and to also learn their ideas regarding the best interior arrangement and the most appropriate furnishings. This important information, which would greatly aid you in deciding about your own building plans, when you take them up with your own architect and builder, can easily be obtained from the several hundred exterior and interior designs that are beautifully illustrated in the last six numbers of the



Architectural Record

The National Magazine for Architects, Owners and Builders —A Powerful Business-Producer for those firms whose products are used in building-construction or equipment —Guaranteed Circulation Exceeds 10,000 Monthly.

In these six numbers are also illustrated and described the numerous building-specialties that add very much to the comfort, convenience and value of the modern home, without materially increasing the initial cost; and this information may mean the saving of many dollars to you.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER

We have a limited supply of these sets of six numbers, which are invaluable to those who expect to build or make alterations. Although the regular price is $1.50 we make you a special offer of $1.00 for the six, while the sets last, if you will mention Scribner's. They will soon be sold. Send us your order today, tomorrow may be too late.

THIS $1.00 SHOULD SAVE YOU HUNDREDS

The Architectural Record, 151 Metropolitan Annex, New York:
Enclosed is $1.00, for which please mail your last six numbers, according to SPECIAL OFFER in Scribner's.

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

Colored Pictures In Life

Naturally you want to know what this means.

It is certainly an interesting innovation, considering that LIFE is the leading humorous paper in the country, and has always been printed in black and white—inside.

October begins a new era for LIFE. Great things are coming. This colored departure is only one of them.

Avail yourselves at once therefore of LIFE'S Great Special Three Months' Offer, by sending One Dollar with the attached coupon filled out (or your name and address will answer).

Obey That Impulse!

Enclosed find One Dollar (Canadian $1.13; Foreign $1.26). Send LIFE for three months

Open only to new subscribers; no subscription renewed at this rate. This offer is net.

Every Tuesday
All News-stands
Ten Cents

LIFE, 54 W. 31 Street, New York

The Magazine Sen

Cosmopolitan Secures America's Greatest

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

and the very best in romantic novels, are synonymous in American literature. His productions, one and all, rank as the greatest that America has produced. Take "The Common Law," for instance, or "The Fighting Chance." They are simply unrivaled. To-day Chambers is at the height of his power. Readers of COSMOPOLITAN will find his new novel, "The Turning Point," to be his best—actually and literally his best.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON

will illustrate "The Turning Point." His matchless drawings are famous the world over. Among pen and ink artists he is supreme, and the illustrations for "The Turning Point" will stand out among his finest efforts.

Incidentally, five-year contracts with both Chambers and Gibson secure the work of these preeminent artists exclusively for COSMOPOLITAN readers.

HOW TO SAVE

At the end of this month, the subscription price of "Cosmopolitan" Magazine advances to $1.50 a year. For the present the price is $1. Now is the time to order. If you subscribe to-day, each subscription will save you 50 cents, and by subscribing sation for 1911

Exclusive Rights to Authors and Artists

DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS

ranks as the great realist of modern fiction. Human hearts and lives lay naked before him. He swept aside the flimsy draperies of convention and looked squarely at the inner workings of Life. What he saw he wove into the most delightful and masterly novels of a decade. And yet, big as his earliest novels were, "The Price She Paid" is even greater. It was his last—and his masterpiece. Be sure to read it.

HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY

will illustrate "The Price She Paid," and his superb drawings add strong pictorial emphasis to the charm of the story. The "Christy Girl" needs no comment, but it is noteworthy that the serial work of both Phillips and Christy will appear exclusively in COSMOPOLITAN.

FROM $1 TO $2.50

2, 3 or 5 years in advance, you will be saving from $1 to $2.50. Every subscription that reaches us after Nov. 10th will cost $1.50—every subscription that comes in before then will cost only $1. This is your last chance. Take advantage of it now.

OLITAN

Sc. 10-11

Cosmopolitan Magazine
381 Fourth Avenue
N. Y. City, N. Y.

Please send me COSMOPOLITAN for........years.
Herewith I enclose $..........

Name..........................
Street..........................
City..........................
State..........................

Here is a way to make some money and NOW is the time to take advantage of this opportunity

Scribners easily leads all magazines in character and genuine interest.

The inducements that it offers to man, woman, boy or girl, who can secure subscriptions for it, are so varied, attractive, and liberal that it is possible for all Scribners representatives to easily make a lot of money.

Now is the time to begin. Some new and especially interesting feature appears every month. Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Remember, Scribners pays liberal cash commissions and gives extra cash prizes. Send for booklet giving full particulars.

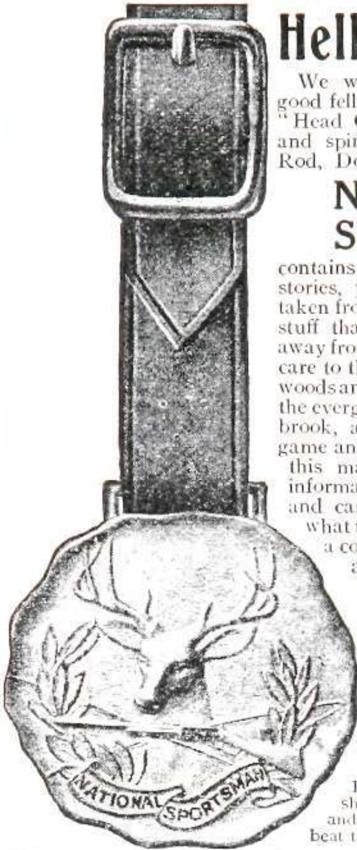
Sample copies, advertising material, etc., sent free.

Address Desk S—Scribner's Magazine, 155 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Scribners readers can confer a favor upon some friend by calling attention to this page



Hello, Brother!

We want you to meet 100,000 good fellows who gather round our "Head Camp" fire once a month and spin yarns about sport with Rod, Dog, Rifle and Gun. The

NATIONAL SPORTSMAN

contains 164 pages crammed full of stories, pictures of fish and game taken from life, and a lot more good stuff that will lure you pleasantly away from your everyday work and care to the healthful atmosphere of woods and fields, where you can smell the evergeens, hear the babble of the brook, and see at close range big game and small. Every number of this magazine contains valuable information about hunting, fishing and camping trips, where to go, what to take, etc. All this for 15c. a copy, or with watch fob $1.00 a year. We want you to see for yourself what the National Sportsman is, and make you this

Special Trial Offer

On receipt of 25c. in stamps or coin we will send you this month's National Sportsman and one of our heavy Ormolu Gold Watch Fobs (regular price 50c.) as here shown, with russet leather strap and gold-plated buckle. Can you beat this?

This month's National Sportsman, reg. price,	15c	All yours 25c for
National Sportsman Watch Fob . . . . . . " "	50c
Total Value	65c

Don't delay—Send TODAY!

NATIONAL SPORTSMAN - - 49 Federal St., Boston

ABBEY'S HOLY GRAIL

one of the most famous works of modern art, is shown in full in our Illustrated Catalogue: new edition, nearly 400 cuts,—practically a handbook of American art,—sent for 25 cents (stamps accepted). Over a thousand subjects to choose from in American art. Reproduced exclusively in

The Copley Prints

These Prints rank with art museums in their influence for good taste in pictures. Abbey himself said he "could not wish better." Fifty cents to $50.00. May we serve you, either by mail on approval, or through your art store? Cost of Catalogue deducted from purchase of the Prints.

Exhibitions for schools, clubs, churches, etc. Family Portraits done on private order from daguerrotypes, tintypes, photographs, ivory, etc.

Copyright by E. A. Abbey; Copley Prints Copyright by

CURTIS & CAMERON 63 Pierce Building Opp. Public Library BOSTON

Mr. Worldly Wiseman Buys Art

We were seated in Mr. Worldly Wiseman's library, which is an exact reproduction of the library of Sir Thomas More, with a stock-ticker, a number of excellent sporting prints, and a photograph of the Stock Exchange building added. Mr. Worldly Wiseman was speaking:

"All the greatest connoisseurs and collectors in the world have been rich men merely because the kind of brains which is required to make money can be used in any other channel with equal success."
—Mr. Worldly Wiseman.

"When I bought that Guido Reni, old Musenseheim tried to steer me toward some high sounding names that he wanted to get rid of. But I kept coming back to the Guido. At last he threw his hands in the air and cried: 'Vell, Mr. Wiseman, it's no use trying to fool you. I sell you it for thirty thousand guineas.' 'Make it pounds and you have sold a picture,' I said. 'Oh,' he said bitterly, 'you are a hard bargainer. How can a poor old Jew picture dealer stand up against a man with a stone for a heart. Take it. It's yours.' But sore as the old fellow was he couldn't help expressing his admiration. 'How did you pick up so much knowledge of pictures?' he said. 'I have been a dealer for fifty years and my father was before me, and in three years you know more than I.' 'Why shouldn't I?' I said. 'How much are you worth?'"

At this moment in the history of his career as an art patron Mr. Worldly Wiseman was called to the long distance telephone. While he was gone the Observer broke in with a wonderful story of a master rogue who sold fake pictures to fresh millionaires. This story may be heard in "The Interpreter's House," which is one of the features of

The October American Magazine

Now Ready—15 Cents

Scribner Fall Publications and Importations

Of any and all books mentioned on this, or the next 9 pages, CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS will be glad to give a more complete description by letter or circular. SEE PAGES 26 TO 35

By

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

The Man Who Could Not Lose

A collection of Mr. Davis's latest narratives: "The Man Who Could Not Lose," "My Buried Treasure," "The Consul," "The Nature Faker," "The Lost House."

Mr. Davis is, first of all, master of the short story. In that field he won his first fame with "Gallegher," and his humor, his sympathetic grasp of character, his sense of the dramatic, characterize these stories as clearly as they did those first ones from his pen. $1.25 net; postage extra

Her Little Young Ladyship By Myra Kelly

Though this is a romantic novel, full of danger and excitement, it possesses also, in large measure, Myra Kelly's humor. The story of a Connecticut planter's daughter who marries an English nobleman, a large part of the narrative has Ireland—a great Irish estate—for setting; and among the Irish characters, as earlier in its pages among the Connecticut Yankees, her fun and wit have full play. The novel proves what those East Side stories suggested—a power to create actual individualities, and to construct a plot that would hold the reader's interest and sympathy throughout.

With frontispiece. $1.25 net; postage extra

"Son" By Ethel Train

The charming and delightfully told story of the adventures of a small boy. "Son" is a real and lovable child, and the people he comes in contact with are as human and as interesting as he is himself.

12mo. $1.20 net; postage extra

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

The Book

"Who that has sought pleasure in Hopkinson Smith's romantic tales, whether of Colonel Carter or of Caleb West, will fail to find it in 'Kennedy Square'?"—Boston Transcript.

The Author

F. Hopkinson Smith's

NEW NOVEL

Kennedy Square

Is Already In

ITS THIRD LARGE EDITION

It is illustrated by A. I. Keller

Note these comments:—

"It is the picturesque atmosphere, the faithful series of pictures of one phase of American civilization, the clearly limned portraitures of beautiful women and gallant men, that give this story a charm that is to be found in all its predecessors from the hand of Mr. Smith."—Boston Evening Transcript.

"One could hardly pick from among his works a more roundly characteristic volume. America needs Mr. Smith, and this is Mr. Smith at his best."—Philadelphia Press.

"The figure of St. George Wilmot Temple is not unworthy of the hand that created Thomas Newcome."—Providence Journal.

"The glamour of the thronged and soft candle-lighted ballroom, the crack of pistols by torchlight, the flowing bowl, the shining silver-laden mahogany, the rush and rumble of the coach and four, the swift clatter of hoofs."—New York Times.

"St. George Wilmot Temple is a worthy successor to 'Colonel Carter.'" —Richmond Times Dispatch.

"'Kennedy Square' is a work in Mr. Smith's own best and most appealing vein."
—New York World.

FIRST PRINTING
July 31
SECOND PRINTING
August 12
THIRD PRINTING
August 26
Price $1.50

Every book-store and every news-stand in the country has a stock

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Remember

"The Forest Lovers"

And Read

Maurice Hewlett's

New Mediaeval Romance

The Song of Renny

A romance of the Middle Ages abounding in adventure, gorgeous in color, alive with the vigorous spirit of "Richard Yea and Nay" and "The Forest Lovers." Not since the latter came from press has a novel appeared to rival this in the field of pure romance.

Earl Gernulf, "Red Bull o' the North," sacks the castle of Coldscaur, steals a lovely child, the Lady Sabine, and swears he will wed her. She defies him openly in his castle. Her love story is interwoven with that of Mabilla, her cousin. The two together, the tourneys and battles which they involve, told with Hewlett's old virility of narrative, mark this as the greatest even of his mediæval novels. $1.50

The Patrician

By John Galsworthy

"It has charm, distinction, interest, and gives an intimate glimpse into English political life."—North American Review.

"The novel is in so many ways remarkable that a review many times as long as ours would be required to do it adequate justice."—The Dial.

$1.30 net; postpaid $1.45

Esther Damon

By Mrs. Fremont Older

The Rev. Charles F. Aked says: "It is a work of rare power. Not for many a long day have I read a story which recalls as this does the sombre tragedy of 'The Scarlet Letter' and the moving pity of 'Adam Bede.' I cannot remember a novel of our day in which the capacity of a cruel religion to produce in one household a saint, a rebel, and an inquisitor, is explored with such relentless fidelity to the facts of human experience." $1.25 net; postpaid $1.35

The Price

By Francis Lynde

"The Price" is describable thus: "You are not going to like it—at least, you think you are not. It will turn out Socialistic—at least, you suppose it will. It is going to be a detective story—at least, you are afraid it may be. And then, after all, it doesn't, it isn't, and you do."—Louisville Post.

$1.30 net; postage extra

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Children of To-Morrow

By Clara E. Laughlin

"Miss Innes is outside—in a cab," he began bashfully.

A true novel of New York. Perhaps no other piece of fiction reflects the actual physical appearance of the city so vividly, or describes in such a graphic manner the life led there, or conveys in so telling a way the city's peculiar atmosphere. This is the more true because Miss Laughlin confines herself to no one section of the city, or of its society. Lawyers, newspaper men, settlement workers, actors and actresses, and factory employees play the parts in this drama; and the scenes are real places in New York, some of them famous, others—and of these the actual locations are given—only known to small circles. Of course, love is the main element, but probably never has the City of New York been so vividly portrayed, or its peculiar life so comprehensively described.

Illustrated in color by Lucius Hitchcock. $1.25 net; postpaid $1.35

Interventions

By Georgia W. Pangborn

A collection of stories by a writer known already to thousands as possessing wide human sympathy and a remarkable insight. Her versatility is surprising. As this volume shows, she is mistress of no one type of story; she is equally effective in stories of childhood, of adventure, or of human motives that involve a deep psychological comprehension.

$1.25 net; postage extra

The Little Dream, An Allegory in Six Scenes

By John Galsworthy

"Can there be found anything more poetic in thought, more exquisite in expression? Truly, in these few pages, Mr. Galsworthy has outdone himself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

This drama, by the author of "The Patrician," proves him the poet some readers of his prose have felt him to be. The scene is a peasant hut among the Alps. A young peasant girl, longing for the world beyond the mountains, learns from the visions and voices of her dream the true values of life.

50 cents net; postpaid 55 cents

The Courage of the Commonplace

By Mary R. S. Andrews

Author of "The Perfect Tribute," "The Lifted Bandage," etc.

A story of true inspiration about a young college man who is made, not broken, by his typical but real tragedy of junior year.

Boards, 50 cents net; leather, $1.00 net; postage 10 cents

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

The Greatest Book

ON

Football Ever Written

Mr. Davis, Princeton '93, himself a varsity football man, here gives a complete and absorbing history of football from its earliest times, traces the evolution of its tactics and of the rules governing them, and describes in clear, graphic manner all the football games up to date in the series between Harvard-Yale, Harvard-Princeton, Yale-Princeton, Chicago-Pennsylvania, Dartmouth-Pennsylvania, Army-Navy, Chicago-Wisconsin, Pennsylvania-Cornell, Michigan-Minnesota, as well as describing many of the great games between the smaller colleges.

Football

The American Intercollegiate Game

By

Parke H. Davis

Member of

The Intercollegiate Rules Committee

With 32 Unique Illustrations
$2.50 net; postpaid $2.70

By Ralph D. Paine

The Stroke Oar

Illustrated. 12mo. $1.50

Tells how the stroke oar of the varsity crew, after being shanghaied in the middle of the college year through an accident, returns after exciting adventures in time to row in the great race at New London.

Sandy Sawyer, Sophomore

Sandy Sawyer, a husky crew man, gets into financial difficulties, and has to work in the summer to earn money to pay for his college course. His adventures make up a jolly, rollicking story. Illustrated. 12mo. $1.50

The Fugitive Freshman

"A mysterious disappearance, a wreck, the real thing in a game of baseball, are but a few of the excitements it contains."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Illustrated. 12mo. $1.50

The Head Coach Illustrated. 12mo. $1.50

"It portrays the best spirit of college athletics."
—Columbus Dispatch.

"In fact, it is a corking good yarn about football."
—Springfield Union.

College Years Illustrated. 12mo. $1.50

"Wholesome stories of undergraduate life. . . . Extremely life-like and accurate."
—Yale Alumni Weekly.

The Boy's Story of Zebulon M. Pike

EXPLORER OF THE GREAT SOUTH-WEST

Edited by Mary Gay Humphreys

Account of the adventures and discoveries of the greatest of the early explorers of the South-west. Pike, famous through daring travels in unknown regions among hostile Indians, was made brigadier-general when only thirty-four years old and was killed in the War of 1812. The book is in the same style as "Trails of the Pathfinders," "The Boy's Catlin," "The Boy's Drake," etc., and well illustrated. Illustrated. $1.50 net; postage extra

OTHER BOOKS IN SAME SERIES

Trails of the Pathfinders

By George Bird Grinnell

"Better reading than many a volume of pure romance."—The Reader.
Illustrated. $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

The Boy's Catlin $1.50 net

MY LIFE AMONG THE INDIANS
Edited by Mary Gay Humphreys
Illustrated from Catlin's Drawings

The Boy's Drake

By Edwin M. Bacon
Illustrated. $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

The Boy's Hakluyt

Retold from Hakluyt
By Edwin M. Bacon
Illustrated. $1.50 net

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

A Great Opportunity | An Enterprise in Publishing

To Mark the Centenary of Dickens and Thackeray

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

issue the works of each in the handsomest edition possible at the lowest price possible on the easiest terms possible.

(See Attached Coupon)

The Tavistock Dickens
36 Volumes

In conjunction with Dickens's publishers, Chapman & Hall, London.

All works including those to which Chapman & Hall hold copyright; and recently discovered contributions to Household Words.

Illustrations from unused duplicates of plates of original edition.

Over 700 illustrations including those of Cruikshank, Brown, Phiz, Leech, Seymour, etc.

The Tavistock Dickens and the Cornhill Thackeray represent greatest care in editorship and highest skill in bookmaking.

Moreover, they are designed to be the most characteristic sets of their respective authors, each containing all the original material in illustrations, prefaces, dedications, etc., published in early editions and approved respectively by Dickens and Thackeray.

The Cornhill Thackeray
26 Volumes

Set by the De Vinne Press.

All Thackeray's own illustrations as well as Doyle's, Du Maurier's, and Frederick Walker's.

Portraits of Thackeray, many unfamiliar; views of his homes and of places associated with his life—the house in which he wrote "Vanity Fair," for instance.

His letters and various recently discovered papers and sketches.

Every volume in each set contains a brief introduction explaining in what circumstances it was written.

Space allows no more to be said here: full information of this unusual opportunity will be given to any who ask it.

Scribner's Library of Modern Authors

Stevenson—Thistle Edition
James—New York Edition
Carlyle—Edinburgh Edition
Stockton—Shenandoah Edition
F. Hopkinson Smith—Beacon Edition
Page—Plantation Edition
Mitchell—Edgewood Edition
Tolstoi—International Edition
Turgénieff—International Edition
Barrie—Thistle Edition
Field—Sabine Edition
Riley—Homestead Edition
Theodore Roosevelt—Elkhorn Edition
Vierge—Don Quixote
Kipling—Outward Bound Edition
Meredith—Memorial Edition

S

...Thackeray
...Dickens
...Tolstoi
...Vierge
...Kipling
...Mitchell
...Roosevelt
...Stevenson
...Stockton ...Carlyle
...Hopkinson Smith
...Turgénieff ...Barrie
...Field ...Riley
...Page ...James ...Meredith

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons:
Please send information in reference to your offer on the authors checked above.

Name ____________________
Address ____________________

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS
153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York

On Public Questions

Popular Law-Making
By Frederic J. Stimson. 8vo. $2.50 net; postpaid $2.70

The American Constitution
By Frederic J. Stimson. $1.25 net

The Conflict Between Collectivism and Individualism in a Democracy
By Charles W. Eliot. 90 cents net

The Indian and His Problem
By Francis E. Leupp, Former U. S. Commissioner of Indian Affairs. $2.00 net

Privilege and Democracy in America
By Frederic C. Howe. 12mo. $1.50 net

The British City: The Beginnings of Democracy
By Frederic C. Howe. $1.50 net

The City: The Hope of Democracy
By Frederic C. Howe. $1.50 net

Latter-Day Problems
By J. Laurence Laughlin. $1.50 net

Industrial America
By J. Laurence Laughlin. $1.25 net

The Principles of Money
By J. Laurence Laughlin. $3.00 net

On Military Subjects

The Rough Riders
By Theodore Roosevelt. $1.50

The Cuban and Porto Rican Campaigns
By Richard Harding Davis. $1.50 net

The Revolutionary War
By General Greene. $2.50 net; postpaid $2.70

Sir William Butler
By Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. F. Butler. $4.00 net

The American Civil War
By John Formby. $4.50 net

Military Memoirs of a Confederate
By General E. P. Alexander. $4.00 net

Reminiscences of the Civil War
By General John B. Gordon. $1.50 net

Home Letters of General Sherman
By M. A. DeWolfe Howe. $2.00 net

On the East

The Story of Corea
By Joseph H. Longford. $3.00 net

Korea
By Angus Hamilton. $1.50 net

Things Japanese
By Basil Hall Chamberlain. $4.00 net

The Real Japan
Manners, Morals, Administration.
By Sir Henry Norman, M.P. Illustrated. $1.50 net

Through Hidden Shensi
By Francis H. Nichols. 8vo. $2.00 net

The Japanese Empire and Its Economic Conditions
By Joseph D'Autremer. 8vo. $3.00 net

Things Indian
By William Crooke. $3.00 net.

Tramps in Dark Mongolia
By John Hedley. With illustrations and a map. $2.50 net

The Referendum in America

By Ellis Paxson Oberholtzer New Edition. $2.00 net

The "Referendum in America," published some years ago and now brought up to date, instantly took its place as a standard work on the Referendum, Initiative, and Recall. This revised edition was published in view of the very general and extended discussion of the questions involved, of certain new phases presented, and of the steady demand for the work.

"This volume is the fullest and fairest account yet published of the steadily growing disposition of the American people to settle all important public questions by submitting them directly to the judgment of the whole body of voters."—The Outlook.

The Spanish-American War

By Rear-Admiral F. E. Chadwick

2 vols. $7.00 net; postage extra

This first important history of the Spanish-American War takes up the relations of the United States and Spain at the point where Admiral Chadwick's "Diplomacy" left off, and gives the complete history of the War from the outbreak of hostilities until the treaty of peace. Admiral Chadwick's active personal part in the War as commander of the New York and as flag-officer of Admiral Sampson, and his familiarity with the sources of the subject, have given him exceptional advantages and make this the most comprehensive and authoritative work yet published on this chapter of our history.

The Revolutionary War and the Military Policy of the United States

By Gen. Francis Vinton Greene $2.50 net; postage extra

"The style is clear and simple, but most attractive. While the story of the Battle of Bunker Hill has been told thousands of times, there is probably no better condensed account in existence."—Boston Evening Transcript.

"A better short account of the American struggle for independence in its strictly military aspects has perhaps never been penned, and none has been more richly provided with maps."—Boston Herald.

The West in the East:

From An American Point of View

By Price Collier $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

"The author's appreciation of merit is shrewd, but his scent for weaknesses is equally keen. . . . There is not a reader who will not obtain an accurate picture of India from its pages, and who will not find himself—probably for the first time—face to face with the real problems of that great conglomeration of countries."—The Academy.

"One of the most amusing, suggestive, and thoughtful works of travel that has been written in our time."—The Spectator.

The Life of Robert Louis Stevenson

UNIFORM WITH BIOGRAPHICAL EDITION

By Graham Balfour Cloth, $1.00; Leather, $1.25 net

This new edition, which was abridged to make its publication with the Biographical Edition of his works possible, has lost nothing essential in value or interest. The abridgment has been chiefly made among the indexes and appendices; but, even there, in such a way as not to injure their usefulness.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157

Franz Liszt

By James Huneker Illustrated. $2.00 net; postpaid $2.20

A brilliant and absorbing study, beginning with an incisive critique by a critic who has himself the authority of a practitioner, and proceeding with a wonderfully diversified account of the principal incidents in a wonderfully romantic life. The whole book is written with Mr. Huneker's characteristic enthusiasm and glows with his prismatic and jewelled vivacity of style.

The Classic Point of View

By Kenyon Cox 32 illustrations. 8vo. $1.50 net; postage extra

It is made up of the Scammon Lectures, six in number, delivered this year by Mr. Cox before the Art Institute of Chicago. He made them, as he says, "a definitive credo—a detailed and explicit confession of artistic faith." After his fine introductory paper called "The Classic Spirit"—a noble definition of what constititutes the permanent value in art—he takes up, in succession, "The Subject," "Design," "Drawing," "Light and Shade and Color," and "Technic."

This book comprises an exposition of the deepest interest to the layman as well as to the artist of sane idealism and sound doctrine.

History of Art in France

By Louis Hourticq, Inspector of Fine Arts in the City of Paris

With almost 1000 illustrations. $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

A new volume in the "Ars Una: Species Mille"—General History of Art Series of Hand-books.

In this, the first complete co-ordinated history of French Art ever published, the author gives an account, condensed yet not bald, of all the Arts of France in all the ages. The book is beautifully illustrated with some 1000 reproductions, four of them in full color.

The Poems of Henry van Dyke

Complete in one volume. $2.00 net; postage extra

Henry van Dyke's poems are so firmly established in the hearts of his countrymen as to call for this convenient one-volume household edition, to include all of them, similar in general plan to the single-volume edition of Eugene Field's poems, published by this house last winter, and to those other one-volume household editions of the other American poets, for whose works there is a great, steady, popular demand.

The Ideal of Jesus

By William Newton Clarke, D.D. Probably $2.00 net

An attempt to answer the question "What is Christianity?" by showing, through a direct examination of Christ's career, the actual principles which governed his life and formed his teaching.

FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

On Music

Overtones
By James Huneker. $1.25 net

Chopin: The Man and His Music
By James Huneker. $2.00 net

Melomaniacs
By James Huneker. $1.50 net

The Education of a Music Lover
By Edward Dickinson. $1.50 net

The Study of the History of Music
By Edward Dickinson. $2.50 net

Music in the History of the Western Church
By Edward Dickinson. $2.50 net

The Pianoforte and Its Music
By Henry E. Krehbiel. $1.50 net

How to Listen to Music
By Henry E. Krehbiel. $1.25 net

Music and Manners in the Classical Period
By Henry E. Krehbiel. $1.50

Some Musical Recollections of Fifty Years
By Richard Hoffman. $1.50 net

Success in Music and How It is Won
By Henry T. Finck. $2.00 net

On Art

A Painter's Progress
By Will H. Low. $1.50 net; postage extra

Promenades of An Impressionist
By James Huneker. $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

Landscape Painting
By Birge Harrison. $1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

What Is Art?
By John C. Van Dyke. $1.00 net; postage extra

Art for Art's Sake
By John C. Van Dyke. $1.50

The Meaning of Pictures
By John C. Van Dyke. $1.25 net

Studies in Pictures
By John C. Van Dyke. $1.25 net

French Art: Classic and Contemporary Painting and Sculpture
By W. C. Brownell. $1.50. The same, beautifully illustrated, $3.75 net

Apollo: An Illustrated Manual of the History of Art Throughout the Ages.
By Salomon Reinach. $1.50 net

The Fine Arts
By C. B. Brown. $1.50 net

Studies in Theology

Each Volume 75 cents net

Christian Thought to the Reformation
By Herbert B. Workman, D. Litt., Principal of the Westminster Training School.

Protestant Thought Before Kant
By A. C. McGiffert, Ph.D., D.D.

A Critical Introduction to the New Testament
By Arthur Samuel Peake, D.D.

Philosophy and Religion
By the Rev. Hastings Rashdall, D.Litt., D.C.L., F.B.A.

Faith and Its Psychology
By William R. Inge, D.D.

Revelation and Inspiration
By the Rev. James Orr, D.D.

Christianity and Social Questions
By the Rev. William Cunningham, D.D., F.B.A.

Modern Travel Series

New and Cheaper Editions

Each $1.50 net

The Andes and the Amazon
By C. Reginald Enock, F.R.G.S.

Links in My Life on Land and Sea
By J. W. Gambier.

Uganda to Khartoum
By Albert B. Lloyd.

Siberia: Travel and Exploration
By S. Turner, F.R.G.S.

In Dwarf Land and Cannibal Country
By Albert B. Lloyd.

South American Series

Each Volume $3.00 net

Uruguay
By W. H. Koebel. With map and illustrations.

Chile
By G. F. Scott-Elliott, F.R.G.S. With map and illustrations.

Mexico
By C. Reginald Enock, F.R.G.S. With map and illustrations.

Brazil
By Pierre Denis. Translated and with an Introduction by Bernard Miall. With map and illustrations.

Peru
By C. Reginald Enock, F.R.G.S. With map and illustrations.

Argentina
By W. A. Hirst. With map and 64 illustrations.

Countries and Peoples Series

Each Volume Illustrated $1.50 net

Belgium of the Belgians
By Demetrius C. Boulger.

Turkey of the Ottomans
By Lucy M. Garnett.

Italy of the Italians

Spain of the Spanish

France of the French

Switzerland of the Swiss

Germany of the Germans

Finland To-Day
By George Renwick, author of "Romantic Corsica." With map and 44 illustrations. 8vo. $3.00 net.

A New Baedeker

The Mediterranean Sea-ports and Sea Routes
Including Madeira, the Canary Islands, the Coast of Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia. With 38 maps and 49 plans. 1911. $3.60 net.

RECENT SCRIBNER

The Story of Corea

By Joseph H. Longford

A concise history from 1100 years before the Christian Era to the Japanese annexation, fully descriptive of every aspect of the country, and the life led by its inhabitants. It is, in its completeness and its lucidity, a unique work, making very clear the supreme political importance of Corea in far Eastern Politics. 33 illustrations and 3 maps. $3.00 net.

Java, Sumatra, and the Other Islands of the Dutch East Indies By A. Cabaton

The first concise yet ample account of their natives, their agricultural and other resources, their administrative divisions, their antiquities, religions, and the social and political life led there. $3.00 net.

Famous Castles and Palaces of Italy

By E. B. D'Auvergne, author of "The English Castles"

He discusses the origin and structure of the time-worn strongholds that crown the Apennines and stud the plains of Lombardy, and relates the thrilling romances and tragedies which have been enacted within their walls. A work of profound interest to the archæologist, the historian, the traveller, and the lover of romance. Illustrated in color and half-tone plates. $3.75 net.

Argentine Plains and Andine Glaciers

By Walter Larden, Lecturer at the Royal Naval Engineering College

Account of life on an Estancia and camping out in the Andes.

Map and 90 illustrations. $3.75 net.

My Climbing Adventures in Four Continents

By Samuel Turner, F.R.G.S.

Tells of daring acrobatic rock-climbing, dangerous mountain exploration, and even mountain discovery. Climbs in Switzerland, Siberia, the Andes, New Zealand, and some very stiff pieces of rock-climbing in England.

Illustrated. $3.50 net.

The Call of the Snowy Hispar

By William Hunter Workman and Fanny Bullock Workman

A narrative of exploration and mountaineering on the northern frontier of India. With 2 maps and 113 illustrations. 8vo. $5.00 net.

Adventure, Sport, and Travel on the Tibetan Steppes By W. N. Fergusson

A vivid story of a perilous journey in a hitherto unexplored region, containing valuable maps, data, and photographs of the mysterious Land of the Lolos.

$4.00 net.

The Great Musicians

A Series of Biographies of the Greatest Composers, in Concise Form, Written by Special Experts. New Editions.

BEETHOVEN, by H. A. Rudall. 12mo. Pp. vii, 165. $1.00 net.
MOZART, by Dr. F. Gehring. 12mo. Pp. vii, 131. $1.00 net.
MENDELSSOHN, by W. S. Rockstro. 12mo. Pp. iv, 147. $1.00 net.
ENGLISH CHURCH COMPOSERS, by W. A. Barrett. 12mo. Pp. vii, 179. $1.00 net.
PURCELL, by Wm. H. Cummings. 12mo. Pp. viii, 124. $1.00 net.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS 153-157

IMPORTATIONS

The Centenary Edition of Charles Dickens's Works

Now Complete in 36 Volumes. Each $1.00 net

"An old-time Victorian atmosphere invests the pages of the Centenary Edition of Dickens with a charm like that which surrounds an old book. Contributory to this, of course, are the original illustrations drawn by Cruikshank and others of the novelist's contemporaries, and type, paper, and binding have in themselves little of that aggressive newness that characterizes the books of the hour. When the Centenary Edition is complete, it will comprise thirty-six volumes of as attractive and readable a text of the great novels as has ever been offered."—Boston Evening Transcript.

"The green cloth binding is simple and in good taste. The edition will be welcome to the many persons of moderate means who wish to have their Dickens in something like the original form."—New York Sun.

The Customs of Old England

By F. J. Snell

Deals mainly with old customs, not only in their picturesque aspects, but in their fundamental relations to the organized life of the Middle Ages, giving special attention to all those with national and international significance.

With 17 full-page illustrations. $1.50 net.

History of Architecture in London

By Walter H. Godfrey

Illustrates the course of architecture in London until 1800, with a sketch of the preceding European styles.

With 250 illustrations and 7 maps. 12mo. Pp. xxiii, 390. $3.00 net.

The Essentials of a Country House

By R. A. Briggs, F.R.I.B.A.

Designed to put before people planning to have "a home of their own," those points that must be thought of before any satisfactory scheme can be formed.

Splendidly illustrated with drawings, photographs, and plans. $3.00 net.

English House Design: A Review

By Ernest Willmott, F.R.I.B.A.

Being a selection and brief analysis of some of the best achievements in English domestic architecture, from the 16th to the 20th centuries, together with numerous examples of contemporary design. $4.50 net.

The English Staircase

By Walter H. Godfrey

An historical account of its artistic types to the end of the eighteenth century.

Illustrated from photographs and from measured drawings. Small 4to. $7.50 net.

Small Country Houses of To-Day

Edited by Lawrence Weaver

With numerous illustrations. 4to. $5.00 net.

Life and Death

By A. Dastre, Professor of Physiology at the Sorbonne

A summary of the philosophy of the science of physiology, the science which deals with the phenomena of life and death.

Translated by W. J. Greenstreet. $1.50 net.

FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

Biographical

Sir William Butler: An Autobiography
By Lieut.-General the Rt. Hon. Sir W. F. Butler, G.C.B. $4.00 net.

Henri II—His Court and Times
By H. Noël Williams. With photogravure and 17 illustrations. $3.75 net.

Rachel—Her Stage Life and Real Life
By Francis Gribble. With portraits and illustrations. $3.75 net.

Louis XIV and Madame de Maintenon
By Charlotte Lady Blennerhassett. With 20 full-page illustrations, including portraits of notable characters of the period. $3.75 net.

Queen Margot, Wife of Henry of Navarre
By H. Noël Williams, author of "The Rose of Savoy," etc. With portrait. New and cheaper edition. $2.00 net.

Isabella of Milan, Princess D'Aragona, and Wife of Duke Gian Galeazzo Sforza
By Christopher Hare. The intimate story of the Princess's life in Milan, told in the letters of her lady-in-waiting. With a number of full-page illustrations. $2.50 net.

Heroines of Genoa and the Rivieras
By Edgcumbe Staley, author of "Tragedies of the Medici," "The Dogaressas of Venice," etc. With 24 full-page illustrations. $3.50 net.

The Fascinating Duc de Richelieu
By H. Noël Williams. Illustrated. $4.00 net.

Madame de Montespan and Louis XIV
By H. Noël Williams. With portrait. New edition. $2.00 net.

Japanese Poetry
By Basil Hall Chamberlain, Emeritus Professor of Japanese and Philology in the Imperial University of Tokyo. 8vo. Pp. xii, 260. $3.00 net.
A translation of some of the best examples of the classical poetry of the Japanese, including ballads, love-songs, elegies, miscellaneous poems from the Ko-kin-Shu, lyric dramas, etc., with an essay on Basho and Japanese poetical epigram.

The Jews: A Study of Race and Environment
By Dr. Maurice Fishberg. "The best American book of the spring. A book that every intelligent Jew should have in his library."—Evening Sun. Crown 8vo. Numerous illustrations. $1.50.

Town Planning in Practice
By Raymond Unwin, F.R.I.B.A. The art of designing cities and surburbs. $6.00 net.

Old Clocks and Watches and Their Makers
By F. J. Britten. New edition. Illustrated. $7.50 net.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

NEW YORK CITY AND VICINITY

THE VELTIN SCHOOL

For Girls. College Preparatory and General Course. Number of pupils limited to twelve in each class. Fireproof building thoroughly equipped. 160 and 162 West 74th Street.

THE GRAHAM SCHOOL

For Girls. 96th year opens Oct. 4th. Resident and day pupils. General and college preparatory courses. Unrivaled location overlooking Riverside Park and the Hudson.
Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Miner, 42 Riverside Drive, New York.

COMSTOCK SCHOOL

Fiftieth Year.
Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Thirty-one West Forty-sixth Street.
Miss Day, Principal.

THE BENJAMIN HOME AND DAY SCHOOL

For Girls. General Courses and College Preparatory Work. Special advantages in Languages, Music and Art. The seventh year begins October 4th, 1911. Mrs. Maurice C. Benjamin, Principal, 144 Riverside Drive, New York City.

THE MISSES RAYSON'S

Boarding and Day School for Girls. Re-opens October 5.
164, 166, 168 West 75th Street, N. Y.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

A School for Girls, 18 miles from New York. Number limited. Healthful location; spacious buildings. Excellent advantages in music and art. General and college preparatory courses. Miss Miriam A. Bytel, Principal, Garden City, Long Island, New York.

THE GARDNER SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Resident and Day Pupils. (57th year.) Exclusive location. Regular and Special Courses. Music, Art, Elocution. Physical culture. Aesthetic dancing. Outdoor life. City advantages with delightful home life. 607 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

HEATHCOTE HALL

The Misses Lockwood's Collegiate School for Girls. All the advantages of the metropolis with fullest opportunity for wholesome outdoor life; riding, tennis, field hockey, skating, gymnasium. General and College Preparatory Courses, Music and Art. Scarsdale, New York. (40 minutes from New York City.)

THE FINCH SCHOOL

A boarding and day school for girls from sixteen to twenty years of age, corresponding to college, which develops individuality, cultivates the human interests and sympathies, and is abreast of modern thought. Curriculum includes Psychology, Ethics, Economics, Sociology, Law, English, Living Languages, Music and Art. New fireproof ten-story building equipped with every appliance essential to safety and comfort. Basket-ball and tennis court.
Mrs. Jessica Garretson Finch, A.B., LL.B., Principal, 61 E. 77th Street, New York City.

THE SEMPLE BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL

For Girls. Building directly opposite Central Park. Regular and Special Courses. Languages, Music, Art, etc. Social recreation. Out-of-door sports. Foreign travel. Mrs. T. Darrington Semple, Principal, 241 Central Park West, corner 84th Street, New York.

MISS SPENCE'S BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL

For Girls. Number in each class limited to eight pupils. Removed from 6 West 48th Street to new fireproof building 30 West 55th Street. Residence 26 West 55th Street.

MRS. HELEN M. SCOVILLE'S HOME AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Advantages of city. Physical Culture, Riding, Swimming, Dancing, Regular Courses, Special opportunities for post-graduates, Music, Art, Home Economics. Individual care, social privileges. European travel classes. 2042 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

ELINOR COMSTOCK MUSIC SCHOOL

A resident and day school. Leschetizky method. Piano teachers all Leschetizky pupils. Vocal, Harmony, Ensemble playing, Sight reading, Lectures on current operas and concerts. Classes arranged in French, Classic Dancing, Literature and History of Art. Catalogues. Miss Elinor Comstock, 1000 Madison Ave., New York City.

GORDON WINSTON SCHOOL

For Girls Specializing. Corner building, well equipped. Curriculum includes Music, Mathematics, English, Art, Languages, History, Philosophy, Ethics, Sociology, Sewing, and Cooking. Mrs. Mary Winston Somerville, A.M., 520 West End Avenue, New York City.

KENT PLACE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

College Preparatory and Academic Courses. Certificate admits to Vassar, Smith and Wellesley. Gymnasium. Physical Director. 20 miles from New York. Mrs. Sarah Woodman Paul, Principal. Hamilton Wright Mabie, LL.D., Prest. Board of Directors, Summit, New Jersey.

THE HOLBROOK SCHOOL

Situated on Briar Cliff, overlooking forty miles of the Hudson. 46th year. Fits boys for College. Ample equipment and grounds. Individual care. Satisfactory references as to character necessary. For catalogue address The Holbrook School, Ossining, N. Y.

MRS. HAZEN'S SUBURBAN SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Half-hour from Grand Central Station, New York.
Mrs. John Cunningham Hazen, Principal.
Miss Sara Louise Tracy, Associate.
Pelham Manor, New York

THE MISSES TEWKSBURY'S SCHOOL

For a limited number of girls. Affords a wholesome transition from home life to a noble womanhood in college or other spheres of culture. Develops latent talents. Music, Art, Domestic Science, gymnasium, outdoor recreations. "House-mother" creates home atmosphere. Catalogue on request. Irvington-on-Hudson, New York. (40 minutes from New York.)

MISS C. E. MASON'S SUBURBAN SCHOOL

For Girls. Upper School for girls 13 to 25; Lower School for girls 8 to 13. All departments. College preparatory, graduating and special courses. Certificate admits to leading colleges. New York City Annex. European class for study and travel. For circular address, Miss C. E. Mason, LL.M., The Castle, Lock Box 707, Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y.

"My Son Having Failed Completely in his preliminary examinations for college, entered your school, and in one year he covered two regular school years of work as is done at most schools, and not only passed his examinations easily for college, but also with credit to himself and his school."

This extract of a letter from the mother of a recent student is one of a hundred or more, valued by Mr. Groff, showing the high grade of success he has had for twelve years.

THE GROFF SCHOOL,

228 West 72d St., New York,

is ideal and exceptional as a boarding and day school.

If a boy is bright and wishes to make rapid progress he is not held back by reason of any other boy, or by the old "grade system." If he is timid or nervous, he is encouraged; if he is careless, interest in his studies is secured; if he does not know how to apply himself, he is taught. To this individual method of teaching is due the Groff School's wonderful success, and "success is what talks."

A thoroughly up-to-date commercial course for boys who do not desire to go to college.

A most liberal system of athletics, wisely directed.

All work prepared at the school under the direction and assistance of expert teachers, unless home work is preferred. Reopened Sept. 28th. Call on or address the Principal (now at the school),

JOSEPH C. GROFF (A. B. and of Class 1893, U. S. N. A.), 228 West 72d St., New York.

Office hours, 9 to 4, or by appointment.
'Phone, 744 Columbus.

NEW YORK SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION

18th year opens Oct. 9th. Daily classes and private instruction in Voice Training for teachers, readers, lawyers, ministers. Drama, Physical Culture. Prospectus. 318 West 57th Street, New York.

NEW YORK STATE

PEEKSKILL ACADEMY

79th year. New Buildings. Alumni Hall (boys 10-13). Address J. C. Bucher, A.M., C. A. Robinson, Ph.D., Principals. Box S, Peekskill, N. Y.

MOUNT PLEASANT ACADEMY

This school, founded in 1814, has won the reputation of thoroughly preparing boys for college, scientific schools or business. Delightful home life. Manual training. Location only 31 miles from New York. MOUNT PLEASANT HALL is for boys under 13. Write for catalogue to Charles Frederick Brusie, Box 508, Ossining-on-Hudson, New York.

MANLIUS SCHOOL, SAINT JOHN'S SCHOOL, VERBECK HALL

Thorough preparation for college or business combined with military training. Designated by War Department as "Distinguished Institution," 1904-'05-'06-'07-'08-'09-'10, this being highest honor paid by U. S. Government.

Wm. Verbeck, President, Manlius, N. Y.

Rates for School and College Advertising in Scribner's Magazine

1 page	$250.00	⅛ page	$31.25
½ page	125.00	1 inch	17.50
¼ page	62.50	½ inch	8.75

Time discounts: 20% on yearly orders. 10% for six months.

Seven lines minimum space accepted.

RYE SEMINARY

A School for Girls. Mrs. S. J. Life, The Misses Stowe, Rye, N. Y.

OSSINING SCHOOL

For Girls. Suburban to New York. 44th year. Academic, Music, Art and College Preparatory Courses, Post Graduate and special work. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Gymnasium. Year book on request. Principal, Clara C. Fuller; Associate Principal, Martha J. Naramore, Ossining-on-Hudson, New York.

PUTNAM HALL

Vassar Preparatory School for girls. Refers to Dr. James M. Taylor, Pres. Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Dr. Wm. Arnold Shanklin, Pres. Wesleyan University; Dr. Talcott Williams, of the Philadelphia Press. Certificate admits to Vassar and other leading colleges. Address Ellen Clizbe Bartlett, A.B., Principal, Box 807, Poughkeepsie, New York.

MACKENZIE SCHOOL

Equipped and administered for the thorough preparation of 150 boys for college, technical schools, and higher business careers. Catalogue and illustrated booklets upon request. James C. Mackenzie, Ph.D., Director, Dobbs Ferry-on-Hudson, New York.

NEW YORK MILITARY ACADEMY

A successful school with a magnificent equipment. Special practical business course for boys not going to college. On Hudson River Highlands near West Point. Separate department for boys under 14. For catalogue, address Sebastian C. Jones, Supt., Cornwall-on-Hudson, New York.

EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL

For Girls. 98th year. On the hills, 400 feet above the city. Four new fireproof buildings, the gift of Mrs. Russell Sage. Preparatory, General and Special Courses. Certificate privileges. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science. Gymnasium with swimming pool. Catalogue on request.

Miss Eliza Kellas, Ph.B., Principal, Troy, New York.

IRVING SCHOOL

For Boys. Prepares for all colleges and scientific schools. In the historic "Irving" country, 25 miles from New York. Gymnasium; swimming pool and fine athletic field. Address J. M. Furman, A.M., Head Master, Box 903, Tarrytown-on-Hudson, New York.

MOHEGAN LAKE SCHOOL

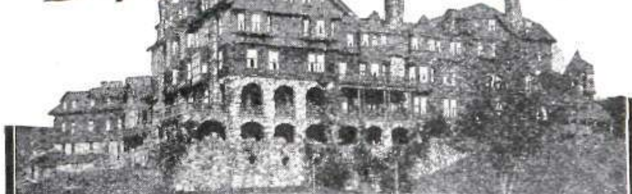
Thorough preparation for College, Technical School or Business. Average number of pupils to a class, eight. Modern buildings. Healthful location on Mohegan Lake. Physical culture and Athletics under competent Director. Booklet. A. E. Linder, A.M., Chas. H. Smith, A.M., Principals, Box 61, Mohegan Lake, Westchester County, New York.

RIVERDALE COUNTRY SCHOOL

Upper New York City. Opposite Van Cortlandt Park. Fifth Year. Healthful location–Delightful surroundings–Thorough instruction. 14 acres–high elevation–Superior Elementary work and College preparation. BOARDING BOYS may earn privilege of week-end visits to their homes, where readily accessible. DAY BOYS go to and fro in charge of a master. AUTO-BUS transportation from and to the city if desired. Send for illustrated booklet.

Frank S. Hackett, Head Master,
Riverdale-on-Hudson, New York City.

THE BENNETT SCHOOL FOR GIRLS



Millbrook, Dutchess County, New York.

Full academic course. Full two years' course for high school graduates. Voice culture, domestic science, gymnasium work and æsthetic dancing open to all pupils. Music, art and riding the only extras. Fully equipped riding school. Location in a section noted for its great natural beauty and wonderful winter climate. 22 acres. Golf, hockey, tennis, basket-ball, skating, tobogganing. The Bennett uniform required. Catalog sent on request. Address

May F. Bennett, P. O. Box 402, Millbrook, N. Y.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

MASSACHUSETTS

Miss Hall's
Town and Country School

In the Berkshire Hills, on the Holmes Road to Lenox. One thousand feet above the sea level. Forty-five acres of woodland and campus.

Miss MIRA H. HALL, Principal,
Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

Mount Ida School

Year Book on request

FOR GIRLS
6 miles from Boston

Individual choice of studies.
Finishing; preparatory school.
Advanced Elective Courses for high school graduates. College Certificate.
Piano, Organ, Voice, Violin, with eminent men.
Domestic Science, Nurse, Gymnasium with swimming pool.
New building makes possible a few more students NOW.

88 Summit Street
NEWTON, Mass.

LASELL SEMINARY

College preparation. Household Arts and Sciences. Ten miles from Boston. G. M. Winslow, Ph.D., Principal, 110 Woodland Road, Auburndale, Mass.

MISS CHAMBERLAYNE'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

General, Special, and College Preparatory Courses.
The Fenway 28, Boston.

MISS CAPEN'S SCHOOL

For Girls. Miss Capen announces that her school, for many years known as "The Burnham School," will in the future be called "Miss Capen's School for Girls." Correspondence should be addressed to Miss B. T. Capen, Principal, Northampton, Mass.

THE BURNHAM SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Founded by Mary A. Burnham in 1877, is continuing without interruption under the direction of Miss Helen E. Thompson and Miss Martha C. Burnham. Preparatory, Graduating and Special Courses. Correspondence should be addressed to Miss Helen E. Thompson, Headmistress, Northampton, Mass.

WORCESTER ACADEMY

All advantages of a large school. Master teachers. Comprehensive equipment. 8 buildings, 22 acres. Gymnasium. "Megaron," a noble recreation hall. Swimming pool. Splendid athletic field. Quarter-mile track. 220 yards straight-away. 78th year began Sept. 12th, 1911. Catalogue. D. W. ABERCROMBIE, LL.D., Principal, 97 Providence St., Worcester, Mass.

ROCK RIDGE SCHOOL

Rock Ridge Hall for boys of high-school age. The Hawthorne House for young boys. For catalogue, address Dr. G. S. White, Wellesley Hills, Mass.

MISS ANNIE COOLIDGE RUST'S FROEBEL SCHOOL OF KINDERGARTEN NORMAL CLASSES

20th year. Prepares for Kindergarten, Primary and Playground positions. Pierce Bldg., Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.

HOUSE IN THE PINES

A school for 25 girls. Intermediate and academic courses. Languages—native teachers. Music, Household Arts. Every attention, not only to habits of study, but to each girl's health and happiness. Miss Cornish and Miss Hyde, Principals, Norton, Massachusetts (30 miles from Boston).

BRADFORD ACADEMY

For Young Women. One hundred and ninth year. Thirty miles from Boston. Address the Principal, Miss Laura A. Knott, A.M., Bradford, Mass.

THE MITCHELL MILITARY BOYS' SCHOOL

A sub-preparatory school of the highest class, which aims to fit boys mentally, morally and physically for the larger preparatory schools. Booklet upon request.
Alexander H. Mitchell, Headmaster, Billerica, Massachusetts.

WHEATON SEMINARY FOR YOUNG WOMEN

77th year. Large endowment permits moderate terms. Certificates to College. Advanced courses for high-school graduates and others. Art and Music. Ample grounds and buildings. Gymnasium. Sports. Catalogue and views. Rev. Samuel V. Cole, A.M., D.D., Pres., Norton, Mass. (30 miles from Boston).

HOWARD SEMINARY

For Girls and Young Ladies. Healthful and beautiful location. 25 miles from Boston. Academic, College Preparatory and Special Courses. Two years' course for High School graduates. Domestic Science. Art and Music studios. Miss Sarah E. Laughton, A.M., Principal, West Bridgewater, Massachusetts.

ABBOT ACADEMY

A School for Girls. Founded 1828. 23 miles from Boston. Address The Dean, School St., Andover, Mass.

MISS McCLINTOCK'S SCHOOL

For Girls. General and College Preparatory Courses. Music, art, arts and crafts, domestic science. Resident and day pupils. Miss Mary Law McClintock, Principal, Box G, 4 Arlington Street, Boston, Mass.

"THE ELMS" SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

College Preparatory, English, Music, Domestic Science, Special Courses. Certificate admits to Vassar, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Simmons. Miss Porter, Principal, Springfield, Mass.

CUSHING ACADEMY

Large endowment permits all the advantages of a high priced school for $275 a year. College certificate. Music. Extensive campus. Five buildings. Athletic field. Gymnasium. Co-educational. Write for catalog. H. S. Cowell, A.M., Principal, Ashburnham, Massachusetts.

SEA PINES

A HOME SCHOOL
For Girls Desiring Individual Attention

Genuine, happy home life with personal, affectionate care. Growing girls inspired by wholesome and beautiful ideals of useful womanhood. The Cape climate is exceptionally favorable for an outdoor life which we make attractive and refining. Seventy acres; pine groves, seashore, ponies. Hygiene and morals are observed especially for results in health, character and education. New equipment. Gymnastics, Music, Handiwork, Domestic Arts, French, German, Spanish—native teachers. All branches of study. Patient and enthusiastic instructors. Address

REV. THOMAS BICKFORD, MISS FAITH BICKFORD, Prins., P. O. Box G, East Brewster, Cape Cod, Mass.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

MASSACHUSETTS (CONTINUED)

PERRY KINDERGARTEN NORMAL SCHOOL

Prepares for Kindergarten, Primary and Playground positions. Mrs. Annie Moseley Perry, Principal, 18 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts.

INDIANA

ELMHURST

Only high grade, non-sectarian country school for girls in the Middle West. Preparatory, Academic and Advanced courses. Music. Preparation for Foreign Travel. Only school in the United States with Mensendieck Physical Training. Estate of 130 acres. Private lake, court golf, tennis. Elmhurst School, Box 2, R. D. 6, Connersville, Indiana.

PENNSYLVANIA

MISS WRIGHT'S SCHOOL

For Girls. Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. Diploma in College Preparatory and Finishing Course. Certificate admits to Vassar, Smith and Wellesley. Circular upon request. Bryn Mawr, Pa.

OGONTZ SCHOOL

For Young Ladies. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. Park of 65 acres. The social and family life is a distinguishing feature. Catalogue and views on request. Miss Sylvia J. Eastman, Miss A. A. Sutherland, Principals, Ogontz School P. O., Box H, Pa.

MISS COWLES' SCHOOL

For Girls. (Highland Hall.) Emma Milton Cowles, A.B., Head of School. Recently associated with Milwaukee-Downer College. Preparatory to Bryn Mawr, Radcliffe, Wellesley and other colleges. Healthful location, 1000 ft. altitude. Swimming pool. Special care to younger pupils. Catalog.
Address The Secretary, Hollidaysburg, Pennsylvania.

THE BIRMINGHAM SCHOOL, INC.

For Girls. An excellent school for girls, offering either academic or college preparatory courses. Healthful location. Gymnasium. Physical training. Main Line P. R. R. For catalogue address
A. R. Grier, Pres., Box H, Birmingham, Pa.

SWARTHMORE PREPARATORY SCHOOL

An excellent school, giving individual attention to pupils. Under the supervision of Friends. Co-educational. Prepares for College, Technical School, and business. Cottage system. Gymnasium, swimming pool and athletic field. Write for catalog. Arthur H. Tomlinson, Head Master, Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

For Young Ladies. Prepares for Wellesley, Vassar, Smith, Holyoke and Bryn Mawr. Modern language and special courses. Music, domestic science. Tennis, basket ball, horseback riding. Miss S. Edna Johnston, A.B., Principal. Miss Edith Holmes Gregory, A.B., Registrar, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

MERCERSBURG ACADEMY

A foremost educator said recently the growth of Mercersburg Academy was one of the greatest pieces of evolution in the history of American education. The truth of his words is elucidated in our booklet, "The Spirit of Mercersburg," which we will send free on request, together with our catalogue. Mercersburg Academy is among the foremost preparatory schools in America, developing in boys self-reliance, quick perception and other qualities that make men of character and action. Prepares for all colleges, technical schools and business. William Mann Irvine, LL.D., President, Mercersburg, Pa.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL SCHOOLS of to-day began to advertise in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE years ago for pupils for to-day. To-day these schools are advertising for to-morrow.

THE MISSES SHIPLEY'S SCHOOL

Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College. Special educational and social opportunities of situation opposite Bryn Mawr College. College Preparatory and Academic Courses. Specialists in all departments. Resident Athletics Director. For circular address The Secretary, Box J, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

SPRINGSIDE

Boarding and Day School for Girls. Mrs. Chapman and Miss Jones, Principals, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia.

MISS MARSHALL'S SCHOOL

For Girls. Academic and Music Departments. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Ideal location. New building. Comfortable home life and out-door sports. For catalogue, address Miss E. S. Marshall, Oak Lane, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

CHESTNUT HILL ACADEMY

A Boarding School for Boys, in the attractive and elevated country north of Philadelphia. Catalogue and views on request.
J. L. Patterson, Head Master, Chestnut Hill, Pa.

LINDEN HALL SEMINARY

Organized 1746, aims to develop home loving and home making young women.
Rev. Chas. D. Kreider, Principal,
Lititz, Lancaster Co., Pa.

THE BALDWIN SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Preparatory to Bryn Mawr, Smith, Vassar and Wellesley Colleges. Certificate privileges. Also a strong general course. Beautiful location, only 20 minutes from Philadelphia. Fire-proof stone building.
Jane L. Brownell, A. M., Head.
Elizabeth Forrest Johnson, A.B., Associate Head.
Address Secretary, P. O. Box F, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

MISS SAYWARD'S SCHOOL

For Girls, in charming, healthful suburb of Philadelphia. Refined home life, modern building, college preparatory and special courses, musical department, physical training, horseback riding, outdoor sports. Develops character, mind and body. For illustrated catalogue, address Miss S. Janet Sayward, Principal, Overbrook, Pa.

THE PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF THE FINE ARTS

Founded 1805. Schools of Painting, Sculpture and Illustration. Twenty-one students awarded $500 each last year for foreign travel as prizes. Instructors: Thomas P. Anshutz, George McClellan, M.D., Charles Grafly, Hugh H. Breckenridge, Cecilia Beaux, Frank Miles Day, Henry McCarter, Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., Daniel Garber. Write for circular.
Broad and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

CONNECTICUT

MISS BAIRD'S SCHOOL

For Girls. 37th year. Intermediate, College Preparatory and General Courses. Superior advantages in Music, Art and the Languages. Library courses arranged. Gymnasium. The home life is replete with inspiration. Miss Ellen Dutton Townsend, A.B. (Wellesley), Principal, 64 West Avenue, Norwalk, Conn.

THE ELY SCHOOL

For Girls.
Greenwich, Connecticut.

HOME TUTORING SCHOOL

Arthur Williams (Yale B.A.), formerly principal of Dwight School, N. Y. City. A country home. Individual Instruction. Thorough preparation for any college or scientific school. School year opened September 28th. Limited number of pupils. For information address Meadow View, Chaplin, Conn.

TACONIC SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Overlooking a beautiful lake in the Berkshire Hills. Girls taught how to study. Miss Lilian Dixon, A.B.; Miss Bertha Bailey, B.S., Lakeville, Conn.

WYKEHAM RISE

A Country School for Girls. Miss Davies, Principal.
Washington, Connecticut.

INGLESIDE

A School for Girls. Founded by Mrs. Wm. D. Black. School year opens Tuesday, October 3rd, 1911.
Mrs. William Black Pell, Patroness.
New Milford, Litchfield Co., Conn.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

MARYLAND

The Tome School for Boys

An Endowed Preparatory School

Elaborately illustrated book on request.

Tuition, $700

THOMAS STOCKHAM BAKER, Ph. D.
PORT DEPOSIT, MARYLAND

MARYLAND COLLEGE—1853-1911
For Women. Baltimore suburbs. Full musical equipment; pipe organ. Home care. Gymnasium. For full High School graduates, a two years' course with B. L. Degree and a three years' course with A. B. Opens October 4th. Catalogue. Charles Wesley Gallagher, D.D., President, Box G, Lutherville, Md.

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE
Offers a practical, well-balanced course, including electives, leading to the B.A. degree. Strong Preparatory Department. Diplomas are also granted in Music, Art and Elocution. Practical courses in Domestic Science. Terms, $300. Joseph H. Apple, A.M., President, Frederick, Md.

NOTRE DAME OF MARYLAND
A College for Women—conducted by the School Sisters of Notre Dame to train the body, mind and spirit—to develop true womanhood. Magnificent buildings in a beautiful park of 70 acres. Rowing, basketball, tennis, hockey. Instructors all specialists. Regular and elective courses. Music, Art. Write for catalog. Charles Street Avenue, Baltimore, Maryland.

VIRGINIA

HOLLINS
A College for Young Women. Founded 1842. College, Elective and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, etc. Located in Valley of Virginia. 700 acres. Seven miles north of Roanoke. Invigorating mountain climate. For catalogue address
Miss Matty L. Cocke, President, Box 308, Hollins, Virginia.

SWEET BRIAR COLLEGE
A College for Women, of the grade of Vassar, Wellesley, Smith and Bryn Mawr. Four years of collegiate and two years of preparatory work are given. On Southern Railroad south of Washington. Catalogue and views sent on application to
Dr. Mary K. Benedict, Prest., Box 108, Sweet Briar, Va.

THE BEST MEDIUM for school advertising is the one which has weight and influence in the homes where the advantages of the Private School are recognized, appreciated and acted upon. Such a medium builds up an institution by supplying it with students who will be a credit to it.

RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY FOR BOYS
A BRANCH OF THE RANDOLPH-MACON SYSTEM. In the Valley of Virginia. Equipment cost $100,000. Large gifts make rates $250 a year. Prepares for College or Scientific Schools. Gymnasium and Athletics. 20th Session opened Sept. 19th. Address Chas. L. Melton, A.M., Principal, Box 408, Front Royal, Va.

STUART HALL
68th Session. Home School for Girls. Church Influences. Catalogue 126 on request. Maria Pendleton Duval, Principal, Staunton, Virginia.

SOUTHERN FEMALE COLLEGE
49th year. An ideal College Home, after highest Virginia standards. Social training. Five buildings with gymnasium. Regular and special courses, Music, Art, Elocution. Domestic Science. New Pianos, Steam Heat, Electric Lights, Outdoor Athletics. $250 to $350. Catalogue. Arthur Kyle Davis, A.M., Box 214, Petersburg, Va.

NEW JERSEY

BORDENTOWN MILITARY INSTITUTE
Our first aim is to make strong, manly, successful men—physically, mentally, morally. College and business preparation. Write for catalogue. Rev. T. H. Landon, A.M., D.D., Principal; Lieut.-Col. T. D. Landon, Commandant, Bordentown-on-the-Delaware, N. J.

PEDDIE INSTITUTE
An endowed school. Strong teachers. 250 boys. Prepares for all colleges. Business course. Music. Sixty acre campus, athletic field, gymnasium, swimming pool. Rates, $400. Lower school for boys 11 to 14 years. Forty-sixth year opened Sept. 20. Catalog. R. W. Swetland, A.M., Prin., Box 10-C, Hightstown, N. J.

MISS DANA'S SCHOOL
For Girls. A Home and Day School. Established in 1877. Beautiful and healthful location. Graduate and college preparatory courses. Unusual advantages in Music, Art, Languages. Gymnasium and outdoor sports. Year opens Oct. 4, 1911. For circular apply to Miss Louise L. Newell, Principal, Morristown, N. J.

BLAIR ACADEMY
64th year. Prepares for any American College. Campus 100 acres. Thorough equipment; liberal endowment justifies low rate of $350. Opened Sept. 14th. John C. Sharpe, A.M., D.D., Principal, P. O. Box N, Blairstown, New Jersey.

CENTENARY COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE
A finely equipped preparatory school for girls. 38th year. 8 complete courses, art, music, and domestic science. Certificate privileges. Gymnasium, all athletics. Non-sectarian. 55 miles west of New York. Send for illustrated prospectus. Jonathan M. Meeker, Ph.D., D.D., Principal, Hackettstown, N. J.

DWIGHT SCHOOL
For Girls. College preparatory and special courses. Certificates accepted by leading colleges. Limited number of pupils insures individual attention. Spacious grounds. Suburban to New York. Gymnasium. Tennis, riding. Address Box 607. Miss Creighton and Miss Farrar, Principals, Englewood, N. J.

MONTCLAIR ACADEMY
Has a distinct personality and method. Fine equipment. College or business preparation. Write for booklet "Your Boy and Our School," with direct message to all boys' parents. Address
John G. MacVicar, A.M., 22 Walden Place, Montclair, N. J.

PRINCETON PREPARATORY SCHOOL
College preparatory school for boys over fourteen. Rapid progress possible because of limited number pupils (fifty) and freedom from rigid class organization. Ample grounds; modern buildings. Personal inspection invited. Address:
J. B. Fine, Headmaster, Princeton, N. J.

Freehold Military School
For Boys 8 to 13

"MILITARY BUT NOT REFORMATORY"
THE FREEHOLD MILITARY SCHOOL
is a home school for young boys only. Small classes.
Half a mile distant but under same management
NEW JERSEY MILITARY ACADEMY
Prepares for any college or business; also West Point and Annapolis. 42 miles from New York, 66 miles from Philadelphia. Gymnasium. For catalogue of either school, address, Major CHARLES M. DUNCAN, Box 107, Freehold, N.J.

New Jersey Military Academy
For Older Boys

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NATIONAL PARK SEMINARY

For Young Women. The story of the school; its remarkable equipment of 20 buildings; its training in homemaking; its study of the Capital—can be told fully only in our catalogue. Address Box 102, Forest Glen, Md. Washington (Suburbs), D. C.

FAIRMONT

A Home School for Girls. Playground adjoining. Catalogue on request.

Columbia Heights, Washington, D. C.

NATIONAL CATHEDRAL SCHOOL

For Boys. An Episcopal country school occupying its beautiful new home. Prepares for Colleges and Universities. Bishop of Washington, Pres. Board of Trustees. For catalogue address E. L. Gregg, Headmaster, Box T, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

GUNSTON HALL

Twentieth season. A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Preparatory and special courses. Art, Music, Expression and Languages. New building, specially planned for the school. Illustrated catalogue on request. Mrs. Beverley R. Mason, Principal, Miss E. M. Clark, LL.A., Associate Principal, 1906 Florida Ave., Washington, D. C.

ST. HILDA'S

School for Post Graduates. A Winter Home for Students. Special courses at the University and in Schools of Art, Music, Modern Languages, Kindergarten, Domestic Science, or private classes.

Miss Laura Lee Dorsey, 1756 P., Washington, D. C.

MARTHA WASHINGTON SEMINARY

For Young Women. In finest residential section of National Capital. Two years' course for High School graduates, general and special courses. Domestic Science. Outdoor sports. $575–$650. E. W. Thompson, 1601 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE

An ideal school for girls and young women. Located within the National Capital; the choicest educational and social advantages; refined associations, most beautiful home life. Charming park of 10 acres. Preparatory, Certificate and College Courses. Music, Art, Elocution and Domestic Science. Literature on request. Address F. Menefee, President, Washington, D. C.

BRISTOL SCHOOL

For Girls. French Residence. Special, Preparatory, Academic and two years' Collegiate Courses. New $50,000 fireproof building, connecting French and English houses. Gymnasium, swimming pool. Basketball, tennis. Capital advantages. Location high and healthful—park of five acres. Miss Alice A. Bristol, Principal, Mintwood Pl. and 19th St., Washington, D. C.

HAMILTON SCHOOL

Opposite the White House. For Girls and Young Ladies. Write for Catalogue. Mrs. Phœbe Hamilton Seabrook, Principal, Lafayette Sq., Washington, D. C.

NATIONAL CATHEDRAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Fireproof building, enlarged on account of increased pupilage from 80 to 100 boarding pupils. In Cathedral Close of 40 acres. Unrivalled music, art and special courses. Certificates to college. The Bishop of Washington, Pres. Board of Trustees; Mrs. Barbour Walker, M.A., Prin., Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

NEBRASKA

KEARNEY MILITARY ACADEMY

Military training combined with Academic and Business courses develops the bodies and minds of boys into Successful, Manly Men. We offer capable instruction, thorough equipment, wholesome environment, healthful climate, moderate prices. Send for our beautiful new catalogue.

Harry N. Russell, Head Master, Kearney, Neb.

MAINE

THE WAYNFLETE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

College certificate. General courses. Number limited, so each girl in her work and play has an unusual personal association with the principals. Athletics. For booklet, address the Principals, Miss Crisfield, Miss Lowell, Portland, Maine.

TENNESSEE

TENNESSEE MILITARY INSTITUTE

A school of national patronage. Prepares for College, Government Academies or business. Individual instruction. New buildings, up-to-date equipment. All forms of outdoor athletics; gymnasium and athletic field. Board and tuition, $350. Catalogue. Address Col. O. C. Hulvey, Superintendent. Sweetwater, Tennessee.

THE BACKWARD BOY

The problem solved. Place him under expert care. $750.00.

W. D. Mooney, Harriman, Tenn.

FOREIGN STUDY AND TRAVEL

FOREIGN STUDY AND TRAVEL FOR AMERICAN GIRLS

Paris, France. Home school for 12 girls; opens Oct., 1911. Courses in French, History, Literature, Art. Month of travel in Italy, Christmas Holidays in Switzerland or N. Africa. Address Principals, Miss Marguerite Gibson, care Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn.; Miss Anna Seaborn, care Munroe & Cie., 7 rue Scribe, Paris.

LES CHARMETTES

A highly recommended Home School for a limited number of girls. Thorough French Education. Every care and attention. House on hill in 7 acres of grounds. Four months in Paris. Reasonable terms. Baronne et Mdlles. d'Hombeeck, Principals, Boisguillaume, near Rouen, France.

OHIO

GLENDALE COLLEGE

Glendale, Ohio. Suburban to Cincinnati. Located in a beautiful, healthful village. Pleasant home life for young women, with special arrangements for younger girls. Collegiate courses adapted for High School graduates. Art, Music, Expression, Household Economics. Terms moderate. Miss R. J. DeVore, Pres't.

THE H. THANE MILLER SCHOOL

For Girls. Limited in numbers. College preparatory and advanced courses. Special advantages in Languages, Literature, History, Music and Art. Preparation for Foreign Travel. Address Mrs. E. Park Smith Miller or Miss Emma Louise Parry, A.M., Lenox Place, Avondale, Cincinnati, Ohio.

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL

For the thorough preparation of boys for college and business. Equipment includes complete Manual Training Shops, gymnasium, swimming pool, seven acre athletic field, running track, bowling alleys. Many unusual features make this school worth investigating. For catalogue, address

Harry A. Peters, Principal, 7210 Hough Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

WISCONSIN

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY ACADEMY

Offers every known advantage for thorough training for business and college. Send for catalog. Dr. S. T. Smythe, Pres., File F, Delafield, Waukesha Co., Wis. Chicago office, 1515 Masonic Temple, Tel. Cent. 3902.

MICHIGAN

THE DETROIT HOME AND DAY SCHOOL

Established 1878. Thirty received in the school-family. Prepares for College. Well-equipped gymnasium and laboratories for physics, chemistry, and domestic science.

The Misses Liggett, Principals, Detroit, Michigan.

ILLINOIS

HAHNEMANN MEDICAL COLLEGE

52nd regular session opened September 26th. Laboratory equipment complete. Clinical facilities unsurpassed. Four years' course. For detailed information address

S. Henry Wilson, M.D., 2811 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

NORTH CAROLINA

ASHEVILLE SCHOOL

IN THE MOUNTAINS OF NORTH CAROLINA NEAR ASHEVILLE

A well-equipped, high-grade school for boys. Climate unexcelled. Scholastic advantages equal to the best Eastern preparatory schools. Property containing seven hundred acres gives opportunity for healthful outdoor life. Graduates now in Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Williams, Amherst, Cornell, Rensselaer, Lehigh, Michigan, Wisconsin, Leland Stanford. Boys attending are from Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Colorado, California, Virginia, N. Carolina, S. Carolina, Florida, Lousiana, Texas, Tennessee, Oklahoma. For Year-Book, address Dean, Asheville School, Asheville, N. C.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

HOME STUDY

Correspondence-Study Dept. offers 350 class-room courses to non-resident students. One may thus do part work for a Bachelor's degree. Elementary courses in many subjects, others for Teachers, Writers, Accountants, Bankers, Business Men, Ministers, Social Workers, Etc. Begin any time.

19th Year U. of C. (Div. F) Chicago, Ill.

STUDY LAW BY MAIL

University Methods Theory and Practice combined. Three courses, University, Business and Banking Law.

Indorsed by Bench and Bar. Guaranteed to prepare for Bar of any State. Special offer. Easy terms. Books free. Catalog free

Standard Correspondence School of Law, 1455 East 53rd Street, Chicago, Ill.

HOME STUDY—FREE TUITION BY MAIL

To one representative in each county and city. Normal, Professional, Academic, Grammar School, High School, College Preparatory, Civil Service, Language, Drawing, Agricultural, Bookkeeping, and Shorthand. Over 100 branches from which to select. Apply for Free Tuition to CARNEGIE COLLEGE, Rogers, Ohio.

LAW

Study at Home

Graduate correspondence students most successful at bar examination. Write today for proof and our free 112-page catalog. We make your home a university. Leading home-study law course in America. Our own modern text—prepared by deans and professors from the big law colleges—Harvard, Chicago, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Stanford and others. Very low cost and easy terms. Also business law. We guarantee to coach free a graduate failing to pass any bar exam.

LA SALLE EXTENSION UNIVERSITY, BOX 1277, CHICAGO, ILL.

Traveling Salesmen and Saleswomen Wanted

Earn While You Learn. We now have on file letters from thousands of Wholesale and Manufacturing firms who are anxious to employ Salesmen and Saleswomen capable of earning from $1,000.00 to $10,000.00 a year and expenses. No former experience needed to get one of these good positions. We will teach you to be a high grade Salesman or Saleswoman in eight weeks by mail and our Free Employment Bureau will assist you to secure a position where you can earn good wages while you are learning Practical Salesmanship. Write today for full particulars, list of good openings and testimonials from over a thousand persons we have recently placed in good positions.

Address, Nearest Office, Dept. 127

National Salesmen's Training Association

Chicago New York Kansas City New Orleans Seattle U. S. A.

IF YOU STAMMER

I will send you my 93-page book "Advice to Stammerers" Free. It explains how I quickly and permanently cured myself. Profit by my experience and write for free book and advice.

BENJ. N. BOGUE

1536 North Illinois St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

MUSIC AND DRAMATIC ARTS

EMERSON COLLEGE OF ORATORY

Largest School of Oratory, Literature and Pedagogy in America. Summer Sessions. 31st year opened Sept. 26th. Address Harry Seymour Ross, Dean, Huntington Chambers, Huntington Avenue, Boston.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ARTS

FOUNDED IN 1884

Connected with Mr. Charles Frohman's Empire Theatre and Companies.

Recognized as the leading institution for dramatic training in America.

Board of Trustees

FRANKLIN H. SARGENT, President

DANIEL FROHMAN JOHN DREW

AUGUSTUS THOMAS BENJAMIN F. ROEDER

For catalogue and information, apply to

THE SECRETARY Room 150, Carnegie Hall New York

CARNEGIE HALL NEW YORK

School Writing Paper

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons are now prepared to receive orders for Writing Paper for school use, with headings printed or stamped from address dies.

ADDRESS STATIONERY DEPARTMENT

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

153 Fifth Avenue, - New York City

The best magazine for School Advertising

is the one which builds up an institution by supplying it with students who will be a credit to it — the one which has weight and influence in the homes where the advantages of the Private School are recognized, appreciated, and acted upon. Not always the homes of the rich, but always the homes of innate refinement.

For 24 years SCRIBNERS has been welcomed in such homes. As such homes have become more numerous the circulation of SCRIBNERS has increased. To-day its value as a medium for advertising the best schools is unequalled — unequalled in the extent of its circulation to homes that count.

Do You Want This Position?

You can't have it because this man is ABLE TO FILL IT!

But you can have one just as good if you will become a specialist.

The International Correspondence Schools were devised to give working men money-making knowledge. Great employers readily accept I. C. S. students.

If you want to know how you can benefit by this great system mark on the coupon the line of work you desire, and mail the coupon to the International Correspondence Schools.

INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS
Box 922, SCRANTON, PA.

Explain, without further obligation on my part, how I can qualify for the position before which I mark X.

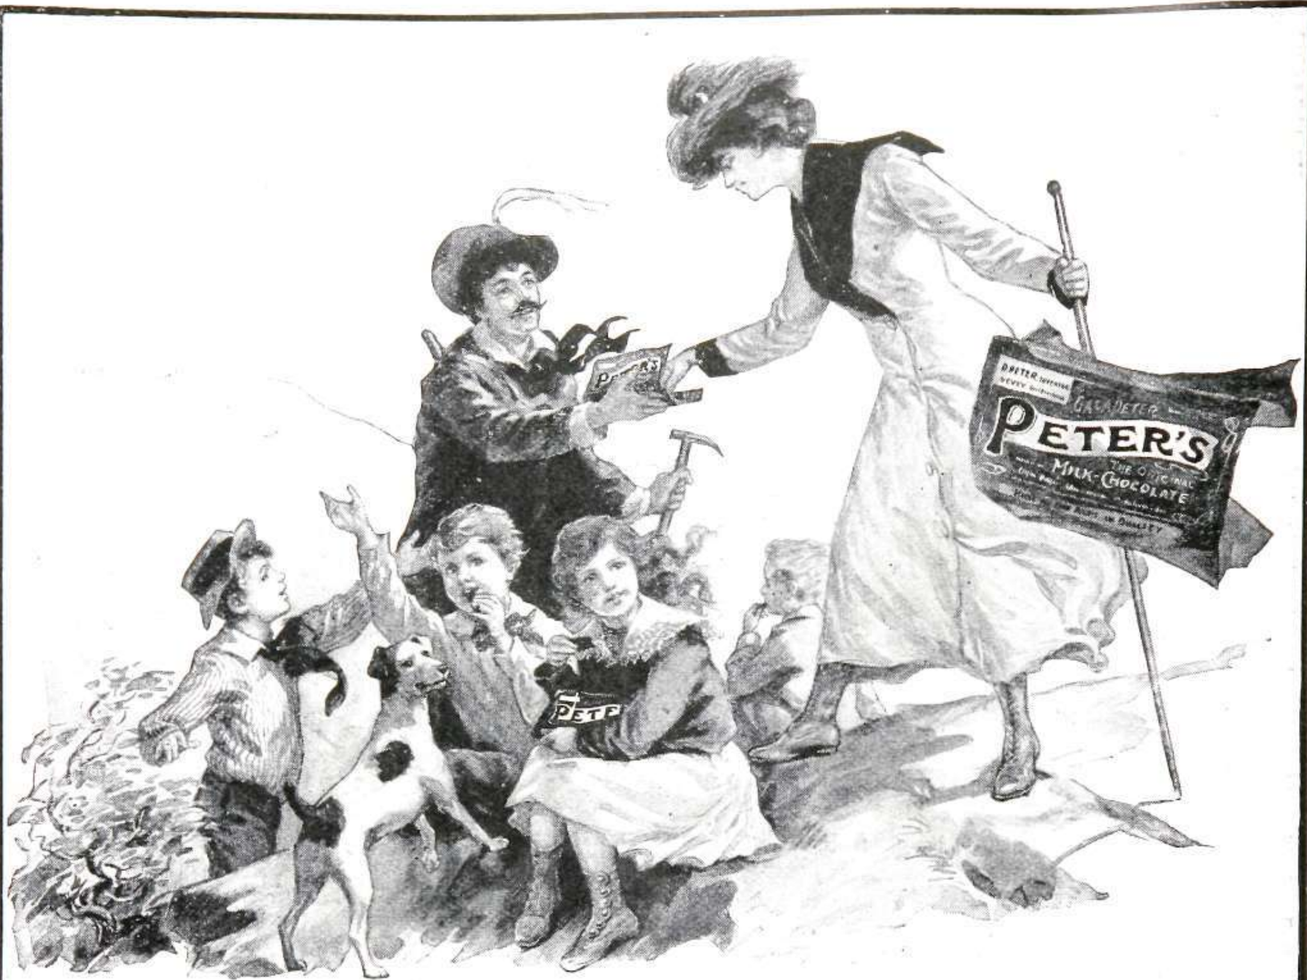
Automobile Running	Civil Service
Mine Superintendent	Architect
Mine Foreman	Chemist
Plumbing, Steam Fitting	Languages — Spanish, French, German, Italian
Concrete Construction	Commercial English
Civil Engineer	Building Contractor
Textile Manufacturing	Industrial Designing
Stationary Engineer	Commercial Illustrating
Telephone Expert	Window Trimming
Mechan. Engineer	Show Card Writing
Mechanical Draftsman	Advertising Man
Architectural Draftsman	Stenographer
Electrical Engineer	Bookkeeper
Elec. Lighting Supt.	Poultry Farming

Name __________

Present Occupation __________

Street and No. __________

City __________ State __________



Peter's Chocolate

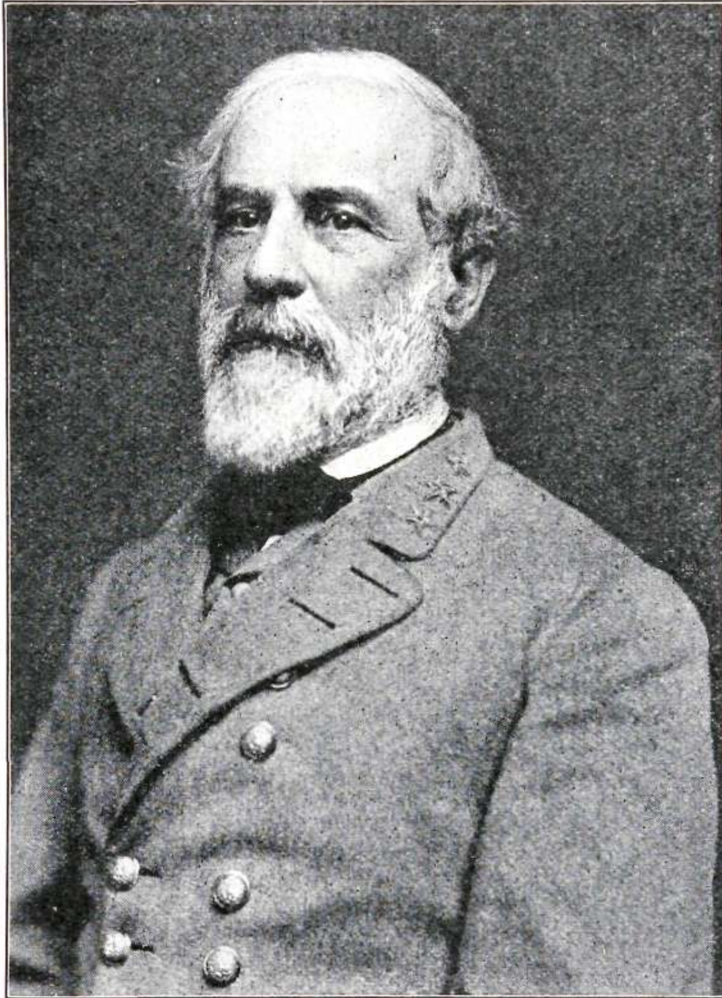
The ideal food for mountain climbing, or for any out-of-door exercise, or for any exercise anywhere—or as a food any time you are hungry.

Peter's has that truly delicious flavor that makes you always want more.

Peter's Milk Chocolate
Peter's Milk Chocolate Croquettes
Peter's Almond Milk Chocolate
Peter's Bon-Bons
Peter's Thimbles with Roasted Hazelnuts

MAGAZINE NOTES

If one were to search through a library made up of famous stories of adventure, including those whose complicated plots and ingenious and surprising situations have piqued curiosity and fascinated by their unexpected revelations, it would be hard to find anything that would rival General Frederick Funston's story of "The Capture of Emilio Aguinaldo," in the November SCRIBNER. The able leader of the Philippine insurrection had evaded capture and hidden himself away so carefully, guarded from pursuers, as to make his capture practically impossible except by superior stratagem. As long as he was actively in the field his faithful followers would keep up the fight, and his capture was absolutely essential for the establishment of peace. "For more than a year his exact whereabouts had been a mystery." In February, 1901, a despatch from St. J. D. Taylor, announcing the voluntary surrender of a band of insurgents whose leader bore despatches from Aguinaldo, gave the clue that led to the planning of one of the most sensational captures in all warfare. With the aid of the despatches, which were translated, after much trouble, from cipher into English, it was discovered that orders called for the sending of reinforcements. The organization of the expedition, the long march through almost impenetrable jungle, the almost incredible escape from detection, and the final dramatic climax in Aguinaldo's capture is one of the most remarkable stories ever written.



General Robert E. Lee.

Of the thousands of distinguished guests at the recent Coronation, very few had better opportunities for seeing the various ceremonies or better know the personalities of the representatives of royalty and diplomacy than Madame Waddington. For years it has been her privilege to meet them socially through the position of her husband and relatives, and she went to London with many memories of other great functions, the funerals of Queen Victoria and King Edward among them. In the November number she gives "An Impression of Coronation Week." It is one of those intimate near views that lets the reader see it all from the inside. As the notables pass in review she comments upon them and the attending scenes in a way that gives an impression of being present. She is a keen observer, as her previous articles have so delightfully shown, of those little human touches, episodes with a touch of sentiment and humor that give an idea of the event beyond its ceremonial aspects. The crowded streets, the solemn ceremonies in the Abbey, the hurry, and the little contretemps that even dignitaries had to put up with are dealt with in a familiar and yet a very graphic way. No account that has been published has had so great a historical value both for its glimpse of the present and a retrospect of great past events.

There will be an article in the November number by Thomas Nelson Page on "General Lee and the Confederate Government." There have been many causes given for the failure of the Confederacy, and General Lee's position and part in the war have been discussed at length, but here is distinctly a valuable addition to the history of the times.

"It will possibly always be a question how far Lee's military operations were affected by his relation to the Confederate Government, and to what extent he was interfered with by the Richmond authorities. That he was much hampered by them seems quite certain, both from the nature of his subordinate relation to Mr. Davis and from the interference which is continually disclosed in the correspondence that took place between them."

Mr. Page brings to his subject the sympathies of a Southern man, but he brings too the dispassionate and careful judgment of the historian, whose purpose is not to find fault or to minimize Lee's splendid career, but to get at some of the causes of his defeat. It is an article that will excite a great deal of discussion no doubt.

"The Confederate Government—by which is signified its officials—had theories about nearly everything—on which, indeed, they were quite willing to stake their lives, if this would have done any good.

Henry R. Poore, the well-known painter of horses and dogs—every one will recall his admirable pictures of the hunting field—has written an article for the November number on "Fox and Drag Hunting in the United States." This is a sport that has from time immemorial been associated with English country life, and there is hardly a little wayside inn in Great Britain on whose walls you may not find one of the old-fashioned colored prints of red-coated men riding to the hounds. Mr. Poore is himself an enthusiastic huntsman, and he has ridden with many hunt clubs, both North and South. He says:

"The fox-hunter is the last relic of the knight of old, the survivor of that chivalric type of Spenser, the only one who now comes 'pricking o'er the plain' benign and independent, albeit with a certain necessitous altruism imposed by the landholder. Modern life and wire hamper him so that the complete joy of the former time, that of roaming care-free and at will, is not entirely his; yet it is safe to say that he, astride of a well-bred hunter, takes less heed to his imposed environment than any other man who inhabits the earth."

The article will be illustrated with the author's own paintings, a number of them being reproduced in full color.

Antwerp and Hamburg have wonderful harbors, and their shipping comes from the four quarters of the world; but, after all, there is no port that so appeals to the imagination as "The Port of London River," about which Ralph D. Paine will write in the next number. It is not alone for its shipping that the Thames below London Bridge appeals: it is brimful of associations identified with prose and poetry. The Water Gate of London Tower, Billingsgate Market, St. Katharine and London Docks, Wapping Old Stairs, Rothercote and Deptford, Ratcliff Road, Limehouse, the West India Docks, Greenwich, the Tilbury Docks, Gravesend, are names to conjure with.

The Thames waterman still flourishes, and if Billingsgate has lost some of its reputation as the place of all places to listen to picturesque variations on the English language, it is still a place of unnamable odors. The Thames barge is still afloat, and along Ratcliff Road "the men who took the Bolivar out across the bay reeled drunk and raising Cain."

The article is illustrated with the author's photographs.

Lewis Gaston Leary tells of "Going Down from Jerusalem to Jericho," in the coming number. It is a way invested with thieves.

"Even by the winding carriage road it is less than twenty miles from Jerusalem to Jericho, but all the way is through the wilderness, and it is always down, down, down—below the hills of Judea, below the surface of the Mediterranean, deeper than the cisterns under the Mosque of Omar or the fishers' nets by Jaffa, down on a level with the lowest mines and the blind, slimy things which crawl through the ooze at the bottom of the sea."

Another article on "Cleveland's Administrations," by James Ford Rhodes, will appear in November.

In this second article the author deals very clearly with the President's position on the silver question, the great Chicago railroad strike, and the disturbing Venezuelan boundary dispute, which for a time seemed likely to involve us in serious trouble with England. While the author does not approve of Mr. Cleveland's position in the latter controversy, he expresses a high opinion of his presidency in general.

"HAVE YOU A LITTLE 'FAIRY' IN YOUR HOME?"

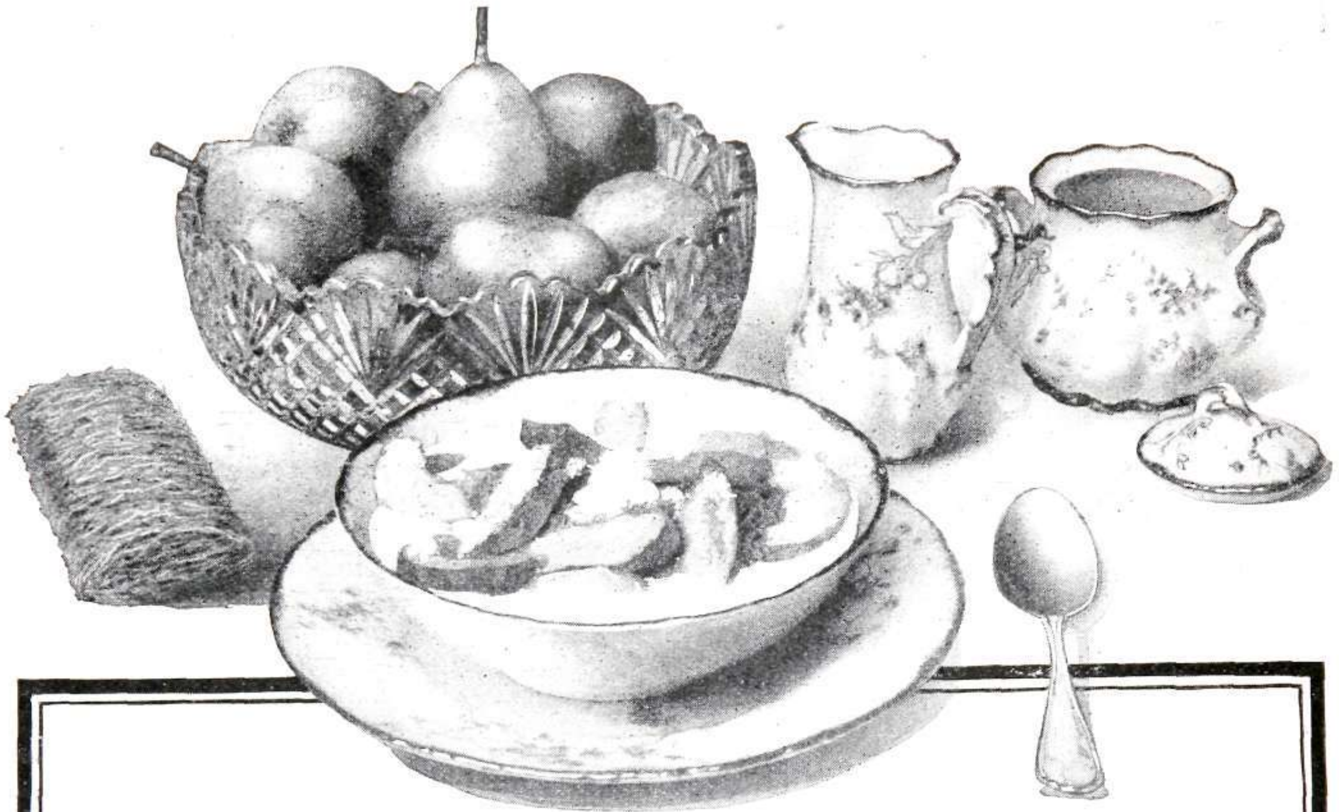
Fairy Soap is Popular Because of its Purity

Scores of soap makers have tried and failed to popularize a white toilet and bath soap. Fairy soap succeeded for two reasons—its purity and the handy oval shape of the floating cake. We put into Fairy soap none but the choicest soap ingredients. We cannot afford to trifle with a success for the sake of a little added profit. Try a 5c cake of Fairy Soap and convince yourself.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
CHICAGO

FAIRY

FAIRY



Eat with Your Brains

Most persons eat only for palate-pleasure. Their daily dietary does not represent intelligent adaptation to the needs or requirements of the body. The result is imperfect nutrition, indigestion, low vitality, ill health, old age. The person who eats with intelligent regard for the health and strength of the body is certain to give a place in the daily dietary. Eaten for breakfast with milk or cream it will supply all the strength needed for work or play. Properly served, it not only nourishes every function of the body but pleases the palate. Nothing so delicious or wholesome as Shredded Wheat with sliced pears, plums, apricots or other fresh fruit served with cream and sweetened to suit the taste.

SHREDDED WHEAT

The Only Cereal Breakfast Food Made in Biscuit Form

THE SHREDDED WHEAT COMPANY, NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Drawn by Philip R. Goodwin.

OCTOBER HUNTING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

VOL. L. OCTOBER, 1911 NO. 4

A MODERN ST. GEORGE

THE GROWTH OF ORGANIZED CHARITY IN THE UNITED STATES

BY JACOB A. RIIS

"THERE are three ways of dealing with the poor," wrote the Secretary of State in 1824, in a report on poor relief to the legislature of New York, "one, to farm them out to contractors; another, to relieve them at their homes; the third, to sell them at auction," and he explained that he meant by the last a public bidding at which he who offered to support them at the lowest price became their keeper. As it often happened that the bidder himself was almost a pauper who chose that way to avoid becoming a burden to the town, the result was that two miserable beings barely subsisted on what would hardly support one—"a species of economy much boasted of by our town officers and purchasers of paupers." He, the secretary, saw no reason for pride in this; neither did he subscribe to the plea of "many men of great minds, that distress and poverty multiply in proportion to the efforts made to relieve them, wherefore the whole subject had better be let alone." His own thoughts on this oldest of human problems were embodied in a bill proposing a fourth way, a poor-house plan which he submitted with illustrations, as it were, this among others from the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism: "The stepping-mill is highly recommended for vagrants, street beggars, and criminals."

Last summer a thousand charity workers from all over the land gathered in the city of Boston to discuss the self-same problem, and they had yet a fifth way to offer, viz., to abolish the poor and the poor-house together. Not one but many bills had they in the making, and while none of them put it in just that way, there was no mistaking the dominant note of the convention: prevention set above cure, and distrust of institutional charity as the sovereign plaster for social failure.

How has this change been wrought in the span of a single long life? What trumpet blast has called this lusty St. George into the lists against the hoariest of the world's dragons which the "great minds" of the past would only too gladly give the right of its foul way? It was but yesterday that we were told how in our great cities the potter's field still claims a tenth of all their life, in utter and hopeless surrender; that the statistician checked off against our national prosperity and honor two-thirds of a million of unnecessary deaths every year, deaths caused by the failure of our social machinery to secure living conditions to our workers—victims of the dragon of poverty; that we were shown by facts and figures how in the greatest city of our Christian land millions of toilers lived in an environment that was all unrighteousness and darkness and death. Whence this doughty champion, and how does he come armed to wage so grim a war?

The knight is the spirit of our age, of the world grown young and strong in our sight, and sure of victory; and thrice armed is he twice over, for not only hath he his quarrel just in the cause of the people, but his sword is the sword of triumphant democracy that knows its swift way to the heart of the monster. Let the old day doubt and tremble; he is of the new; an' he slay not the dragon, to the dungeon he will drag it, bound and shackled, to harass mankind no more.

Copyright, 1911, by Charles Scribner's Sons. All rights reserved.

Sea Breeze, Coney Island.

How now? Is our champion but a strutting braggart, or what warrant has he to make so brave a boast? Let us see what it is that has happened, is happening in our day, and perhaps through the story of charity organizing to deal with its problems we shall get an answer to our question. And at the outset let me say that when I speak of New York I have in mind as well every other city in the land. New York's problems are different from those of Chicago, of St. Louis, of Seattle and San Francisco only in their greater intensity because of the greater crowds. And the struggle to meet and conquer them is everywhere the same, however its phases vary; Chicago has set the world's pace in its provision for the people's play. San Francisco's example of resolute courage in the face of a great disaster will stand for all time. Pittsburg meets just censure with admirable spirit and sets about cleaning house. Seattle evolves from the wilderness a commercial metropolis and a city beautiful upon its hills. New York leads in the fight on the White Plague, the arch enemy of us all. So, since it is manifestly impossible in the brief space of a single article to cover so vast a ground, I take my own city as the type of them all, which in truth it is.

Leaving for the city after their holiday at Sea Breeze.

Not long after the Secretary of State made his report there came a winter to New York with want so bitter that it set at naught all efforts at meeting it, including the poor-house and the stepping-mill. All sorts of hasty, ill-advised relief agencies were set on foot and they all together failed. Its lessons were so dear that for many seasons the minds of thinking people were wrought up over it, and at length, five years after the winter of 1837–8, there was born out of the discussion the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, to deal with the problem of poverty in its economic and moral aspects. "Social" was to be added later; it is the contribution of our own day, and in the single word is the key to it all. But if not in the profession, it was there in the practice of those early philanthropists. Their purpose they set forth as to follow in the footsteps of the Master, who went about doing good; and the search for ways of doing it, without hindering where they wished to help, brought them instantly face to face with the wicked home conditions of the people. Housing reform became their first task. Year after year the association presented indictment upon indictment of our tenement-house system. As early as 1848 it drew plans of model tenements in its reports, and by successive steps, from its continued agitation, sprang the Improved Dwellings Association, which made the first real advance toward, one feels tempted to say, "human" housing in New York, and the City and Suburban Homes Company that is marching on in the van still of all such efforts.

Little cripples on the beach at Sea Breeze, Coney Island.

The city grew and the society's problems grew with it. "Incredible numbers of vagrant children grew up in ignorance, profligacy, and crime." The Juvenile Asylum came; a school census was undertaken by the society that dealt the public-school management an awakening blow. It is curiously suggestive of the difference between then and now to find the President of the Board of Education even as late as twenty years ago, in a letter on school destitution, "taking into consideration," as outside the discussion, "the children under eight years whose parents do not wish them to attend the school, and the children legally at work." The association in reply "questions the propriety" of exempting "these children." The unschooled numbered, it turned out, more than a hundred thousand. The upshot of it all was a much-needed school census and a boom in school building that endures to this day.

Two or three vacation schools were started by the association and run by it until the city took them over. They were from the first a great success. By contrast it had to abandon its effort to furnish baths for the people, as being "too far in advance of their habits." Forty years later it repeated the attempt and its success shows how far we had come; that the "great unwashed" were no longer so by choice. Indeed, if there be any to-day who hold to the old fallacy, let them for their instruction go out to Sea Breeze, on Coney Island, where the association sends its thousands of mothers and children in summer, or let them go to Bath Beach, where the even greater crowds of the Children's Aid Society splash in the surf. Watching them at their sport, they will have no difficulty in believing that the "bathing-bell is even more popular than the dinner-bell" there, despite the fact that there is nothing the matter with the appetites of those bathers. The Children's Aid Society was itself, like so many others, an outgrowth of the public sentiment which the experiences of the older society had helped to create. It is easier to grasp the meaning of the incalculable waste of manhood and citizenship with which the old indifference was justly chargeable than to measure the harvest of this sowing in not yet sixty years, when one scans the records of the more than one hundred thousand children for whom the Children's Aid Society has found homes on Western farms, and counts among them, grown up, a hundred teachers, including high-school principals and college professors, a regiment of clergymen, doctors, lawyers, bankers,

Out for an airing.

Little mothers.

Her only nurse.

Waiting for mother.

merchants, legislators, an army of honest farmers, and at least two governors, one territorial, the other a bare-legged lad from New York's slums who, transplanted to the West, went to the war a drummer boy and at forty was elected governor of North Dakota. And in this accounting are not included the vast numbers of boys and girls whom the society Charles Loring Brace founded has sheltered in its schools and lodging-houses, and who stayed in the city.

Go forward now twenty years from the time he put his hand to the plough, to the day when little Mary Ellen was carried into a New York court, beaten and bruised and wrapped in a horse blanket, to claim the rights of the vagrant cur in the street since there was no law to protect a human child from abuse; learn that the aid of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, of which Mary Ellen was in very truth the mother, has been invoked since for three hundred thousand little ones, and almost one needs the assurance of their work, those pioneers, that New York was a Christian city. And yet from beneath the very pity and the burden of it all the dawn breaks that inspires the new gospel of hope and courage. Mary Ellen did not suffer in vain. Monsters there are to-day as then, but law now for her, and for them too. And of the thousands to whom a better chance was given out in the open, the merest handful went astray. Enough "ran wild" to give the pessimist his handle; but scarce one in four hundred came into collision with the law, so say the records of the Children's

On the beach.

SCENES AT SEA BREEZE

Sweeping back the ocean.

Gathering courage

Aid Society. What would have been their story in the "environment that made all for unrighteousness"?

They are all at work yet, these societies, and have their labors made their tasks easier, or less? No, not yet. "There are two main causes of poverty," said Robert M. Hartley, after twenty-five years on the firing line as the leader of the parent society's forces—"improvidence and overwhelming misfortune." Against these their forces are thrown, early and late. One takes the young and transplants them to a fairer field; the other betters their chance at home and betters the environment as it can. Up at Hartsdale on the Hudson the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor conducts, through the wise and tender munificence of a good citizen, a "School for Mothers" that comes close to the heart of things. There, tired women have the one chance of rest and quiet which the tenement never gives, at the time when they most need it, and while they get well, are taught how to keep well and to keep the baby well too. Down on the sea-shore the same loving care gathers the little cripples in whose joints the tuberculosis germ has taken lodgment, and gives them their one and only chance for life in the salt breezes, summer and winter. These are real remedies for the adverse "causes." As mothers are taught to care for their babies, the infant mortality is lessened, and already the city is pledged to take over the care of the little cripples on a much larger scale. A volunteer society conducts a "preventorium" in the poor by social and sanitary reforms." A single year's registration of 3,420 families that were tapping different relief sources discovered an able-bodied man hiding in three-fifths of them, hundreds living in plenty on the contributions of whole strings of societies, each of them believing the family its own particular charge. My back the country to "head off" the mischief they fight to cure. Yet, as we shall see, the modern day does not accept these "causes" as final. It is because the reasoning that projects them halts midway, it says, that the mischief continues and will not down. It aims at nothing less than an uprooting that shall get rid of the causes themselves, and this, it maintains, is the function of democracy. If it has not power to do that it is an idle dream.

Convalescent mothers at Caroline Rest.

Forty years of fighting for the poor brought the community face to face with the fact that the battle was slowly but surely going against it. For every head struck from the dragon of poverty, two grew in its stead. The stream of charity that had succeeded the old indifference was transforming poverty into pauperism. Begging was becoming an organized business. Charity organized in its own defence. In New York it was a wise woman who spoke the word. To the clear head and tender heart of Josephine Shaw Lowell her city will owe a debt of gratitude all its days. Upon her initiative the Charity Organization Society was founded in 1882, to prevent the overlapping of relief, and to "promote the general welfare of aches yet when I think of the Christmas eve trip I made to an old woman who lived alone in a hut at what is now the Ninth Street entrance to Prospect Park, and was reputed to be very poor. I toiled up the long slope with a sack of provisions, to encounter at her door an emissary of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, similarly burdened. Our comparing notes did not help ease our backs, for we carried the things back where they had come from, but it resulted in the discovery that the woman had $1,800 in bank and was a preposterous old fraud. And there were many such. Several winters after that I contracted a habit of contributing a nickel on my way home from the office to another old creature who sat in Chatham Square churning a wretched pocket edition of a hand-organ while she rocked a baby in her lap. It was always midnight when I came that way, and the baby appealed to me tremendously—especially when it snowed and the cold was bitter—until one night, as I dropped my nickel in her cup, the old woman lurched in the very act of mumbling her blessing upon me, and dropped the baby on the pavement. I picked it up, horrified, to find that hung upon them, giving them the appearance of scarecrows," they were indeed an object-lesson as they stood before the police justice.

A "school for mothers," Caroline Rest.

"Who was to blame?" thundered Mr. Fairchild, in one of the earliest leaflets of the Charity Organization Society. "The dissipated women, the crowd of drunken it was a rag doll. The "mother" was drunk. In five years the society, after a series of such shocks to the nerves of New York, was able to report that the worst of that lot were "working for the city," no longer working the city. They were not, as I have shown in my own case, the only ones who had been doing that. In truth, we were all guilty, the selfishly ignorant with the selfishly cunning. Some of us still remember the sermon in which Charles S. Fairchild, afterward Cleveland's Secretary of the Treasury, held the mirror up to us all. His text was the finding of two little children in a Washington Street den with a lot of dissipated women who sent them out daily with baskets to levy tribute on the pitiful. On the food they brought back the symposium of hags lived high; the money they spent for drink. "Covered with vermin, their hair unkempt and matted, while their few garments, men's sizes, and lazy people, the wretched mother—yes, all of these! But who were their partners? Who else but the givers of those cold victuals? If you had refused to give to those children without finding out for yourself what was amiss, the dissipated women and the drunken and lazy crowd would have had no motive to hide them and they would have come at once under good influences. The city of New York stood ready to provide amply for them, to place them where they would have been given a chance in life, where they would have worn garments enough on those cold winter days, not of 'men's sizes' either; where their hair would not have been unkempt and matted; where they would have ceased to appear 'like miniature scarecrows'; where they would have been taught to read and write, would have learned religion, morals, humanity, and whence they would have gone forth to decent, comfortable homes. And you, you givers of cold victuals, stood in the way of all this beneficence. You are to blame for the misery of these infants. You are guilty. You made their degradation too valuable to the disorderly crowd. You and your cold victuals!

Day camp on an old ferry-boat.

Fresh-air class of a New York public school at luncheon.

"'Covered with vermin,' too. When your terrier is thus, you do something—something besides giving it more cold victuals."

There are people yet who give cold victuals at the door and believe their brotherhood arrears paid with that, just as there are dispensers of charity tea—the tea put up by a highly respectable dealer "in New York and Newport," who sent me his invitation to buy with the pregnant suggestion: "It is politely requested that this tea be used only for the purpose intended." There is even the woman who in a workless winter, with starvation abroad all about, gives a Christmas party to her lap-dog. We hear of such yet, but if the conviction has become deep and general among thinking men that there is need of doing something beside doling out back-door alms, the society of which Mr. Fairchild was one of the founders deserves full credit for helping it on.

At the outset it was not intended as a relief society, though that was and is a feature of its work which gives rise intermittently to the charge that it "spends more for salaries than for groceries," and sometimes even, because of its pernicious activity in the cause of the people—as seen from Albany—to a vengeful demand for an investigation of its accounts. But these things are happily rare now. The days of storm and stress lie a good way behind. The need of investigation, of registration, is understood and admitted. When the society reached its silver wedding with the day of good sense, it had its real work well in hand and declared boldly that, having begun with the purpose of ultimately diminishing poverty, it had come to the conviction that it might and must be abolished in so far as it meant the lack of the essential conditions of normal living. To which end it stated the office of organized charity to be: having a bird's-eye view of the community needs, to take up and carry out whatever reform, whatever task they point to that is not yet in hand. The principle thus enunciated stands; through the door it opened organized charity everywhere has gone out "to seek and destroy," in the words of Dr. Edward T. Devine, its spokesman at the Philadelphia National Conference, "those organized forces of evil, those particular causes of dependence and intolerable living conditions which are beyond the control of the individual" yet may be overcome by society acting as one. It remained only to make sure of the forces of evil. Were they, indeed, contained in the old formula, "improvidence and overwhelming misfortune," or had we further to seek?

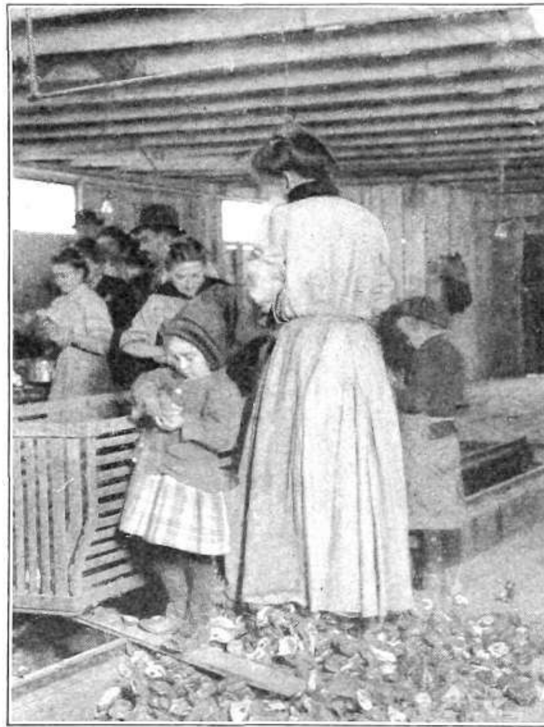
Naturally, what lay nearest to hand came first. I came across the other day one of the old reports of the society that spoke of the "long and tedious fight" for a municipal lodging-house, toward which getting rid of the police-station lodgings was a necessary step. The words made me smile, for I had a hand in that fight myself. It was long, yes, but tedious never. I fed fat an ancient grudge all through it, for I knew from personal experience what those inhuman dens were like and that it was a Christian duty to destroy them. Besides, I worked side by side with Mrs. Lowell, and the day they were closed by Theodore Roosevelt, police commissioner, we triumphed in the fight half won. The other half awaited the dawn of common-sense at Albany until this summer, when the bill to establish a farm colony for young vagrants, to wean them from the tramp's life, passed the legislature at last. It was the legacy of the past, the halting midway, of which now there is to be an end.



A small girl shucking oysters in a southern oyster cannery.

For the day of construction has followed the breaking of ground. The opening of New York's first playground in Poverty Gap itself, though it did not endure then, was earnest of what was coming, has come, as every one knows. School boards no longer ask, as did New York's in those days, for proof that play is "educational"; they know it is, as much as their books. The grass in the people's parks is not sacred nowadays; the boy is coming to be that instead, and the country is safe. School-houses and settlements invite the children in, where in the old days the corner-saloon was the only bidder with its back-room, sole recreation hall for the young, and this was its shameless bid: "Bring the girls, and pay for their drinks." It is fifteen years and more since a policeman shot down a boy in the street for playing ball, and the bullet is not made that will ever seek such a target again. So, there we are safe.

Into the homes of the poor have come sunshine and air. The demon of darkness is not slain; there are more than a hundred thousand bedrooms yet in New York's tenements that are not fit for pigs to be in, let alone human beings. Whenever we settle back with the contented sigh that the battle is won, it is going against us. In Brooklyn, last winter, they got themselves into a state of righteous indignation because they were told by those who should know that the city of homes and churches let its poor dwell in darkness too. No such thing, they said; couldn't be. But it turned out that there were as many sunless rooms as in Manhattan, and that they bore a direct relation to the number of baby funerals, once charged to the inscrutable decrees of an all-wise Providence. Letting in the light was just a question of ten or twelve dollars from the landlord's pocket. Putting it plainly: "dollars or death?" is a great help. But though years may pass before we hear the last of the "infant slaughter-houses," as Mr. Gilder called the baby-murdering tenements, a million souls have been rehoused decently since the Charity Organization Society formed its tenement-house committee, and the housing problem is no longer hopeless. We have a tenement-house law and a Tenement-House Department to enforce it, more or less faithfully as we let politics strengthen its grip, or compel it to relax it—that is a question for us to settle as citizens. They were both part of the Charity Organization Society's social programme and grew out of its labors. And year by year its tenement-house committee stands guard in the legislature, watchful of landlord attacks on the one hand and of any fresh symptom of public indifference on the other, well knowing that underlying more social mischief than all other causes together is bad housing. "To prevent drunkenness," said the earliest legislative report on what ailed New York, way back in the middle of the last century, "give to every man a clean and comfortable home," and though it was laughed at then, it came much nearer the truth, in its simple philosophy, than the "great minds" whose remedy was to let things alone. Last spring there came to the meeting of the National Housing Association from half the States in the Union men and women to carry its message of work and victory back with them to the farthest hamlets, for no longer are these fighters content to seek the foe in the slums of cities. Ignorance and apathy thrive in country lanes, as in city streets, and they make the slum in all days. The National Housing Association is the youngest child of the Charity Organization Society.

Reproduced by courtesy of National Consumers' League.

Mother and children making artificial flowers at twenty cents a gross.

The legacy of death and despair with which the dark-room tenements have cursed New York no man can measure. There are 10,000 deaths in the city every year from tuberculosis alone, and 40,000 dying slowly from the plague and spreading it among the rest of us. Five thousand little sufferers with misshapen, tortured limbs have it grafted upon their bones, for this is the one great cause that makes cripples of the children of the poor. The doctors tell us that a hundred thousand underfed, anæmic children are waiting their turn that is not slow in coming, and for them all there is but one help, light and air, which the dark tenement denies them. Yet even this record of slaughter does not measure the depths of the misery; when the father or the mother can no longer work, helpless poverty moves in and the tasks of the charity workers are hopelessly multiplied—hopelessly till it was discovered that consumption is not transmitted by heredity, but bred by an environment steeped in dirt and ignorance. We were long finding it out. More than a hundred years ago they jumped at the truth in the kingdom of Naples and stamped the disease out with fire and stringent laws. They burned the bedding and the houses of consumptives, and banished those who would not submit. The whole kingdom had become a hot-bed of tuberculosis to which the stricken came from all parts of Europe as they flock to Colorado and New Mexico in our country and our day, until vedi Napoli e poi mori—"See Naples and die"—had become a proverb. People think nowadays that the saying refers to the beauty of the bay of Naples which makes a man content to die once he has seen it. So utterly was the plague stamped out that the world forgot the sinister sense of it.

The spinning-room overseer and his flock in a Mississippi cotton mill.

Cotton-mill operatives so small that in order to reach their work they have to stand upon the machinery.

A young messenger who works until after 1 A. M. in a city in Virginia.

Those despots knew nothing of germs and all the rest of the scientific lore; they just guessed and backed up their guess with force. Democracies walk with more wary feet. Nearly a century passed before we knew what they had so successfully imagined, and were ready for the fight. The tubercle bacillus and the Charity Organization Society were born in the same year, born to a fight that was no longer hopeless. For it is with disease as with poverty: once you have made sure of the cause you have backing. Twenty years they have wrestled now, and an entire people has been aroused to take a hand in the fight, in which at last we are getting the upper grip.

A nipper waiting for a "trip" a quarter of a mile underground in a Pennsylvania mine.

Multiply the mortality in New York by twenty and you have the record of the nation: 200,000 each year slain by this one foe, a million consumptives always with their faces set toward death; half of them easily saved, if taken in time. When once the disease has a firm hold they can be saved only from destroying others. Doctors alone were powerless; it was a campaign of education that was needed. The tuberculosis committee enlisted the printing-press, the newspapers, the post-office. The Christmas stamps of Denmark became bullets in the fight. Each one on the back of a letter asked questions, and the committee, and the Red Cross, were ready with the answers. "Don't spit, don't neglect a cold, don't sleep in stuffy rooms"—the "don't cards" went everywhere, printed in every tongue. In Little Italy they took the shape of pretty posters of Venetian canals with simple instructions printed on the border, and were hung in the rooms as pictures. Illustrated lectures were given in the schools; travelling exhibitions of the horrors of "lung blocks," of the simple ways of fighting the enemy with care and cleanliness, were started on their journeys through the land. Thousands flocked to them. "Tuberculosis revival meetings" were held in crowded halls. "Tuberculosis Sundays" enlisted the aid of the pulpits. In New York on a single Sunday more than two hundred sermons were preached by prearrangement on this topic. The committee fitted out an old ferry-boat as a day camp and showed that the sick had other choice than to go far away to mountain or forest, or stay at home and die. They could stay, even in the tenements of New York, and live, given fresh air and wholesome food.

It was not only the citizen who needed education; half the time it was the city. In New York the Health Department was crippled by politics. It had led a valiant charge, but ran short of ammunition. The men who held the city's purse-strings were niggardly. Organized charity swung its forces toward its support. An investigation showed that of the more than 40,000 consumptives in the city whom the department had registered, half had got away and were drifting about, scattering the contagion unhindered. The infected houses they left had other tenants who did not know of their peril and took no precautions. Hospitals were discharging patients daily without inquiry into where they went, and without following them up. With only three thousand beds for consumptives in the city, thirteen thousand went in and out through the year. The endless chain of mischief and misery was in full operation again.

Young breaker boys at work in a Pennsylvania mine.

With the facts in hand the tenement-house committee started a "budget campaign" and carried it through with resistless energy. The city appropriated $263,500 for the Health Department's tuberculosis work. Instead of eight inspectors the department sent out a hundred and fifty. It borrowed a leaf from Tammany politics by organizing the city into districts, each with a "captain" in the person of a nurse directing the fight in that quarter. In the schools fresh-air classes were opened for the pale and "unresponsive" pupils. They were fed with hot meals at noon and with milk and bread in between, and the teacher found listlessness and stupidity giving way to life and interest. Tuberculosis clinics were opened in the crowded parts of the city and the country caught up the idea. In seventeen months one hundred and seventeen such special dispensaries were started in the United States, and more are added constantly. We are not out of the woods yet. Sanatoria are needed—many of them—for those who can be cured, the while charity cares for their loved ones at home and frees the patient's mind from worry; hospitals with forcible detention for the homeless wanderers who spread contagion abroad; more than a single preventorium for the hundred thousand pale and ill-fed ones who are listed as the consumptives of the next generation. But already the impact upon the death-rate in the urban population of New York State is discernible. In five years it should show plainly. Legislatures are aroused, prevention has become the national slogan in the struggle with the White Plague. The number of hospitals and sanatoria for tuberculosis has increased from 111 with 10,000 beds in 1895 to 422 with 26,000 beds in 1911. The State Charities Aid Association which is in the field to "make each local community look its own social work squarely in the face and get it to do what is needed," and has done it with such success that twenty-three out of fifty-seven counties in New York have taken steps to provide tuberculosis hospitals in the last two years, has raised the banner, "No uncared-for tuberculosis in 1915." All through the land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, resounds the crash and clamor of this battle. Organized charity is winning the biggest fight it has started yet.

A few of the boys who work on a night shift in a Virginia glass factory.

Fight, yes! But the war is wider than that. Consumption kills the man. There is that which would kill the state. It is not only underfeeding that makes the pale, anæmic children who fall an easy victim to tuberculosis and who cannot learn in school. It is well to cut windows in the dark rooms and to make playgrounds where the children can romp and grow into whole men and women. But if their hours out of school are spent at home, toiling till late at night at tasks far beyond their years, making the violets that blossom in my lady's hat at three cents a gross; cutting out embroidery edging at one cent an hour; making baby dresses at forty-two cents for a day of fourteen hours of unremitting labor —oh! I am not imagining these things. I am telling the story we all read, those of us who cared, in the photographs at the Child Welfare Show in my city—when they do this, where then is their play? And where will be, by and by, the citizenship we look for in free men of a free country? Free country! When the census tells us that the volume of child labor is increasing far more rapidly than the population; that as exploiters of tender childhood for our gain we are rushing headlong in the steps of Old-World nations who long since saw whither that course led and abandoned it for their own safety; when in Southern cotton mills children under ten are at work, "some of them so small that they can reach their work only by climbing up"; when Pennsylvania reports that in the coal-breakers the accidents to children exceed those to grown workers by 300 per cent; Indiana that in her factories the ratio is 250 per cent; and Michigan owns to 450 per cent excess of injury and fatality against the child—with such things existing, was he far off the track who in anger exclaimed: "This may be child labor from one point of view; from another it is child murder!" And what other remedy is there than war to the death on such abuses?

Hence it is that organized charity, which sees in the exploitation of the child the ruin of the man and the endless perpetuation of its tasks, has thrown down the gauntlet to this foe and has roused the whole country to demand that "there shall be no child labor." The boy or girl who toils with a needle through the evening hours by the dim light of a smoky kerosene lamp, and in school falls behind his class because he cannot see what is written on the blackboard, does not need spectacles to be given him by private or public charity. That is the wrong prescription. He needs to be taken out of the tread-mill that is killing his sight with his spirit. You see how inquiry into the "causes" leads deeper and ever deeper down, and demands ever more searching remedies. Against the cruelty of a drunken father the protection of a strong society may avail; against such inhumanity as this the power of the whole community must be invoked. Nothing less will do it.

Seven years has the war against child labor raged in the nation. Its irreducible demand is that no child shall be permitted to work under fourteen; none at night, or at dangerous trades, nor more than eight hours in the daytime, under sixteen. The call of bugles is in the air as I write this, and the tramp of many feet, little and big. They are marching to the celebration of the "sane and safe Fourth of July," that obtains at last in my city. But not until this fight has been won are we either sane in celebrating our freedom, or safe in fact; not until then are we on the road to real independence of the thraldom of toil that was meant to be the honorable badge of manhood, not the hideous destroyer of childhood. And while we are about it we mean to safeguard, too, the mothers of the race. There are few States in the Union to-day that have not given their assent to the principle, at least, of child-labor legislation; the practice will follow in them all, as the community conscience is aroused. New York has made a law that no person under twenty-one shall be employed in the night messenger service, since an investigation in twenty-seven cities disclosed the moral slough in which it steeped young boys. The bawdy-house, the gambling den, the disreputable hotel are among its best customers after the lights go out in quiet homes. The Supreme Court has intervened for the protection of woman. "Ten hours the maximum legal working day for women in every State of the Union within ten years" is the confident claim of the National Consumers' League. Before that day we shall, I believe, be ready to demand that all home work in tenements shall cease, at whatever cost of readjustment to the industries that now thrive upon this form of economic slavery.

Toward these ends organized charity is working, but it no longer soothes itself with the belief that they are in fact ends; rather they are stages on the way. A human working day does not fill the measure of industrial justice. When we are told that in Allegheny County—that is, Pittsburg—526 workers were killed by industrial accidents in a single year, 258 of them married men with families, it no longer sounds like a threat to ask that the burden of such wholesale slaughter shall fall upon the business, not on the worker. Rather it seems like the counsel of common-sense that it is both wiser and cheaper to do industrial justice than to foot the bill for the machinery of court and jails, and public and private relief that may soothe but cannot cure anything. When the death-rate among the foundlings in the Randall's Island Hospital was, year after year, 100 per cent—they practically all died, in spite of Jersey cows and every care which medical knowledge could suggest—and the joint committee of the State Charities Aid Association and the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor took them over and, by putting them out in families, reduced the mortality in the first year to one-half, in the second to less than a third, and at the end of eight years to eleven in a hundred, then they had found a perfect remedy for that misery, viz., to give the baby a mother instead of a nurse. So, when the nurses of the last-named society, working among tenement mothers with new-born children, found that they lost 17 per cent of the babies to whom they were called after they were born, while they saved all but 5 per cent when they took the mother in hand before her confinement, and that this held true right along, they had met and conquered a condition of fatality consequent upon ignorance with its logical corrective: proper instruction and care. But when the statisticians show us two-thirds of a million unnecessary deaths in the nation, and find the causes in a poverty consequent upon intermittent employment, too long a working day and too low wages to keep the workers alive, then we are facing something which charity, in its simple sense of trying to relieve, cannot deal with. We are facing an industrial malad-

Photographs by Underwood & Underwood.

Boys sent to farms from New York City by the Children's Aid Society.

On the farm. Boys sent by the Children's Aid Society.

justment which society itself must take in hand, if it will be not only just but safe.

To this conviction their work has led the social workers of to-day; for, observe that organized charity has changed front entirely from the day when it considered poverty only in its economic and moral bearings on the man or the family. And here we meet again the "causes" of poverty for which men have sought in all days. They found them, as they thought, only to discover that there were yet others beyond their reach. "Improvidence and overwhelming misfortune" satisfied them in the long ago. Later on, the scientific tabulators counted up twenty-five or twenty-seven, I forget which, all real sources of misery as they knew only too well. It did seem as though, with such an array, we should be getting somewhere, but we were not. The bread-line was still there, in itself an ugly arraignment of something desperately wrong somewhere; for the midnight bread-line is made up of hungry men. The homelessness was still there. Improvidence explained some of it, intemperance some of it; all the rest of the "causes" each accounted for its share; none, nor all of them together, for it all. What if they were, in fact, symptoms—the very lack of character, of capacity, of efficiency, in the front rank?

That is the vision which social workers saw when six years ago they proposed a new definition of the problem of poverty. Stripped of all verbiage, they found the causes of the poverty in our cities to be four: ignorance, industrial inefficiency, exploitation of labor, and failure of government to attain the ends for which it existed, the welfare of the citizen. Poverty in their view was but evidence of a maladjustment of society itself, against which we strive in vain unless we enlist the very forces of the society which created it. The remedies then present themselves. Ignorance and industrial inefficiency demand changed methods of education. Manual and vocational training crowd forward at once. We are adopting them already, on the very showing that the great mass of our young who leave the school at fourteen to go to work get nowhere with the training they have received. They join the army of unskilled workers, and middle-age finds them fatally handicapped, "industrially inefficient." Look at the map and see what a host they are. A clear-sighted school-man marshalled them in line thus: Standing shoulder to shoulder, the high-school graduates of the country made a line across the State of California; the college men reached barely across the peninsula of the Golden State. But the public-school children who quit early from force of economic stress reached across the country from California to Maine, back again, and once more across mountain and plain as far east as Chicago. To half of the mischief the school holds the key.

Exploitation of labor! What is there that has not been exploited in our money-mad day? But first and last the worker is the sufferer. When we read of the swindling with false weights and measures, it is upon him the burden falls heaviest. When the packer puts a cent on the meat, the retailer sticks on five and an extra cent or two for selling in the small quantities where his biggest profits lie. While you who read this pay five dollars a ton for coal, he pays twelve or fourteen, buying it by the pail. Wherever he turns, the sea is full of sharks. He pays more rent in proportion than the man on Fifth Avenue. The pawnbroker with whom he establishes a credit, in the ineffectual struggle to make ends meet, charges him fifteen or eighteen dollars a year for the use of ten. That is what it comes to, with "hanging-up" charges, if he resorts to the pawn-shop weekly, as too many do. It was "to divorce the three golden balls from the three Furies" that the charity organizers established the Provident Loan Society which in seventeen years has increased its capital from a hundred thousand dollars to seven millions and a half, has loaned out seventy millions, and brought down the usurious rates of the pawnbroker. Waste and improvidence, yes! but the destruction of the poor is still their poverty. The saloon lies in wait for the man who lives from hand to mouth, the policy game robs him, corrupt politics exploit him in a dozen ways he counts as kindness. When we deny him a transfer on his way home from his work, we impose a tax of thirty dollars a year on a family whose entire income may not be much over six hundred and whose total expenditure for clothing in the year is less than three times thirty. Some one said that ours is yet "a half-savage society infused and fitfully illuminated with visions of social duty."

"But these things are inevitable." No, says the social worker: the whole environment in which the poor man is set in our cities is unfavorable to him; it favors, on the other hand, the accumulation of great wealth. He does not arraign the one against the other; he says simply that the heaping up of great fortunes carries with it the responsibility of not exploiting the poor.

Time was when we sat and grieved over the bad heredity that held men fast, forgetting that their real heredity as children of God flatly refutes such a doctrine. Then when we saw that the thief's child, growing up in a decent home, grew decent with it, we concluded that this dreaded heredity was, after all, the sum of all past environments and that, since we could fashion that of to-day, we could make heredity for the days to come, and we took heart. But the environment proved too much for us. Now comes the charity worker, the social worker, and says to us: "We will change the environment through the very forces that made it. Society has worked out crooked results. It was not its purpose; therefore, let us find the wrongs in government and correct the mischief at its source, so giving the real man his chance. The very defects in character, which now hopelessly oppose us, we shall be able to repair by strengthening the man, by lightening his burdens and brightening his outlook." We may not abolish all poverty, for we cannot prevent unforeseen disaster; but undeserved poverty, the misfortune we can help, we shall really help that way and only that way. The individual we shall always have to relieve as best we can; and the better we understand, the better shall we be able to set him on his feet. The social end we shall all have to get under, to lift the environment that crushes the worker. For it is the only way we can do it.

Let the worst of society's vices, the social evil itself, serve as an illustration. When, says Dr. Edward T. Devine, with whom I unreservedly agree—when employers pay their girls living wages, when their homes are made attractive enough, when prostitution is kept out of the tenements as the law says it shall be, when rational amusement is provided for the children of the poor, when men cease to tempt them with vile resorts for their own gain, and when we speak the truth plainly of this matter, deluding ourselves no longer with the vain hope that segregation and such measures will banish this evil—then prostitution will be reduced to so small a thing that we shall need to concern ourselves little about it.

This, then, is the case of organized charity in briefest outline, as it stands to me. It is easy now to see the place and significance of such signs of our times as City Planning, as Municipal Research, as Surveys of the Cities to seek and find the standard of living to the maintenance of which all social efforts must tend, if they are to work out enduring results; as the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research that hunts the hook-worm and its fellows, and with them hunts much of poverty to its lair; the Sage Foundation, that great benefaction which gathers into its benevolent purpose all educational efforts seeking to harness the world's forces "for the improvement of social and living conditions"; schools of philanthropy and social settlements. The war on the housefly seems no more incongruous than the demand for a living wage. They are all parts of a whole that pursues the same unselfish end: lightening the intolerable burdens of humanity which selfishness has imposed.

I suppose I shall be asked now if this is not all socialism. No, I should not even term it altruism. I should call it religion. And before you scoff at that definition, read the programme of social service which was "enthusiastically adopted" by the Baptist Church in convention at Philadelphia only the other day. Beginning with justice for all men and ending with "the abatement of poverty," it embraces under seventeen heads that include the abolition of child labor, the sweating system, and the overlong working day, the whole programme of human emancipation, point by point. These people were not crank socialists, it seems; they were practical Christians. Does the emphasis that is laid by the whole Christian Church upon social service nowadays, and the recognition by government after government of the principle of employer's liability, of the old-age pension, and the rest of the claims once held as Utopian tell us nothing? Massachusetts is preparing to fix a minimum wage for women and minors, and I took note recently of the editorial confession of a critic who wondered where all this would end: "The final argument in this controversy is, of course, that when less than living wages are paid, the number of paupers and criminals, with incidental burdens on the taxpayer, inevitably increases." Yes, that is the position of organized charity, exactly.

There are two kinds of socialism, it has been truly said, one of which we shall have to let in unless we want the other to break in. The one kind says, "What is mine is thine!"—that is service. The other meets us with the threat, "What is thine is mine!"—that is vengeance. We shall have to chose one of the two, and I think that is what we are doing. It has often seemed to me that the function of present-day organized charity—and I mean the term to embrace all that we now call betterment work—is twofold: on the one hand it is, with its army of irresistible facts, helping turn the church from the barren discussion of dogmatic differences to face the real needs of the brother; on the other it is guiding the old threat into the safe and helpful ways of service, and giving us for a socialistic, a social programme. Nor is there need of fear that in the change the personal touch that counts for so much will be lost. The "scientific" charity is not cold; it is warm and human. If it were not so it would have no power to appeal to the religious impulse. It is "organized love," and it is effective: it does not by mischance hinder where it sought to help.

Has organized charity really accomplished all this; or is it itself part of a great world change to which coming generations will point as the most pregnant in all human history, the coming of democracy into its birthright? Even so, is this modern St. George not in truth a slayer of dragons? And if we reject him as our champion, where shall we find another to enter the lists?

THE TURNSTILE

BY A. E. W. MASON

I

THE SWINGING OF A CHANDELIER

AT the first glance it looked as if the midnight chimes of a clock in an old city of the Midlands might most fitly ring in this history. But we live in a very small island, and its inhabitants have for so long been wanderers upon the face of the earth that one can hardly search amongst them for the beginnings of either people or events without slipping unexpectedly over the edge of England. So it is in this instance. For, although it was in England that Captain Rames, Mr. Benoliel, Cynthia, the little naturalized Frenchmen, and the rest of them met and struggled more or less inefficiently to express themselves; although, too, Ludsey, the old city, was for a good deal in their lives; for the beginnings of their relationship, one with another, it is necessary to go further afield, and back by some few years. One must turn toward a lonely estancia in the south-west of Argentina, where, on a hot, still night of summer, a heavy chandelier touched by no human hand swung gently to and fro.

It happened in the dining-room of the house, and between half-past ten and eleven o'clock. It was half-way through January, and Mr. and Mrs. Daventry were still seated at the table over a late supper. For Robert Daventry had on that day begun the harvesting of his eight leagues of wheat, and there had been little rest for any one upon the estancia since daybreak. He sat now taking his ease opposite his wife, with a cup of black coffee in front of him, and a cigar between his lips, a big, broad, sunburnt man with a beard growing gray and a thick crop of brown hair upon his head; loose-limbed still, and still getting, when he stood up, the value of every inch of his six feet two. And as he lounged at the table he debated with his wife in a curiously gentle voice a question which, played with once, had begun of late years to insist upon an answer.

"We are both over fifty, Joan," he said "And we have made our money."

"We have also made our friends, Robert," replied his wife. She was a short, stoutish woman, quick with her hands, practical in her speech. Capacity was written broad upon her like a label, and, for all her husband's bulk, she was the better man of the two even at the first casual glance. There was a noticeable suggestion of softness and amiability in Robert Daventry. It was hardly, perhaps, to be localized in any feature. Rather he diffused it about him like an atmosphere. One would have wondered how it came about that in a country so stern as Argentina he had prospered so exceedingly had his wife not been present to explain his prosperity. It was so evident that she drove the cart and that he ran between the shafts—evident, that is, to others than Robert Daventry. She had been clever enough and fond enough to conceal from him their exact relationship. So now it was with an air of pleading that she replied to him:

"We have not only made our friends, Robert. We have made them here. If we go, we lose them."

"Yes," he answered. "But it wouldn't be as if we had to start quite fresh again. I have old ties with Warwickshire. Thirty years won't have broken them all."

Joan Daventry answered slowly:

"Thirty years. That's a long time, Robert."

"And yet," said Robert Daventry with a wistfulness in his voice which almost weakened her into a consent against which her judgment no less than her inclinations fought. "And yet there's a house on the London road which I might have passed yesterday—it's so vivid to me now. A white house set back from the highway behind a great wall of old red brick. Above the coping of the wall you can see the rows of level windows and the roof of a wing a story lower than the rest of the house. And if the gates are open you catch a glimpse of great cedar trees on a wide lawn —a lawn of fine grass like an emerald."

His eyes were turned back upon his boyhood, and the thought of his county set his heart aching. Long white roads, rising and dipping between high elms, with a yard or two of turf on either side for a horse to canter on; cottages, real cottages, not shapeless buildings of iron standing gauntly up against the sky-line at the edge of a round of burnt bare plain, but cottages rich with phlox and deep in trees—the pictures were flung before his eyes by the lantern of his memories as if upon a white sheet. But, above all, it was the thought of the greenery of Warwickshire which caught at his throat; the woods flecked with sunlight, the lawns like an emerald.

He glanced at a thermometer which hung against the wall. Here, even at eleven o'clock of the night, it marked this January ninety-seven degrees of heat. The mosquitoes trumpeted and drummed against the gauze curtains which covered the open windows; and outside the windows the night was black and hot like velvet.

Robert Daventry drew his handkerchief across his forehead and with his elbow on the table leaned his face upon his hand. His wife looked at him quickly and with solicitude.

"You are tired to-night, Robert," she said gently. "That's why you want to give the estancia up."

Robert Daventry shook his head and corrected her.

"No, Joan. But I am more tired to-night and very likely that's the explanation." Then he laughed at a recollection. "Do you remember when the squadron came to Montevideo two years ago? There was a dinner at the legation at Buenos Ayres. I sat next to the commodore, and he asked me how old I was. When I told him that I was just fifty, he replied: "Ah, now you will begin to find life very interesting. For you will notice every year that you are able to do a little less than you did the year before." Well, I am beginning, my dear, to find life interesting from the commodore's point of view."

Joan did not answer him at once, and the couple sat for awhile in silence, with their thoughts estranged.

For Joan Daventry shrank, with all her soul, from that coveted white house on the London road. Old ties could be resumed, was Robert's thought. He was forgetful that the ties were his, and his alone. She had no share in them and she had come to a time of life when the making of new friends is a weariness and a labor. With infinite toil and self-denial they had carved out their niche here in the Argentine Republic. They spent the winter in their house in Buenos Ayres, the summer upon the Daventry estancia. Their life was an ordered, comfortable progression of the months. For both of them, to her thinking, the time for new adventures had long gone by. They had had their full proportion of them in their youth. And so while Robert Daventry dreamed of a green future Joan was busily remembering.

"When we first came here to settle," she said slowly, as she counted up all that had been done in these twenty-seven years, "we drove for two days. If the house on the London road is vivid to you, that drive is as clear to me. Our heaviest luggage was our hopes"; and Robert Daventry smiled across the table.

"I have not forgotten that either," he said; and there was a whole world of love in his voice.

"When we reached here we found a tin house with three rooms and nothing else, not a tree, hardly a track. Now there's an avenue half a mile long, there are plantations, there's a real brick house for the plantations to shelter. There are wells, there's a garden, there's a village at the end of the avenue, there's even a railway station to-day. These things are our doing, Robert"; and her voice was lifted up with pride.

"I know," replied her husband. "But I ask myself whether the time has not come to hand them on."

Once more the look of solicitude shone in his wife's eyes.

"I could leave the estancia," she said doubtfully, "though it would almost break my heart to do it. But suppose we did. What would become of you in England? I have a fear," and she leaned forward across the table.

"Why a fear?" he asked.

"Because I think that people who have lived hard, like you and me, run a great risk if they retire just when they feel that they are beginning to grow old. A real risk of life, I mean. I think such as you and I would be killed off by inactivity rather than by any disease."

She did not deny that something was wrong in their present situation. But she had a different conception of what that something was; and she had a different remedy.

"We should find life too dull!" he exclaimed. "Too lonely, Joan!" and he struck the table with his hand, "I find it lonely here"; and at that she uttered a low cry:

"Oh, my dear, and what of me?" and the wistfulness of her voice struck him to silence, a remorseful silence. After all, his days were full.

"There's our other plan," she suggested gently.

"Yes. To be sure! There's our other plan," he said. He leaned back in his chair, his face upturned toward the ceiling, and a thoughtful look in his eyes.

"We have talked it over, haven't we? But we have played with it all the time. It would be so big an experiment."

He ended the sentence abruptly. The look of thought passed from his face. It became curious, perplexed. Then he cried with a start of dismay:

"You see, Joan, even my eyes are beginning to play tricks with me. I could swear that the chandelier is swinging to and fro above our heads."

Joan looked anxiously at her husband, and then up toward the ceiling. At once surprise drove the anxiety from her face and thoughts.

"But it is swinging," she exclaimed.

Both of them stared at the chandelier. There was not a doubt about the phenomenon possible. Not a breath of wind stirred in the garden, not a sound was audible overhead. Yet very gently the chandelier, with its lighted globes, oscillated above their heads. Robert Daventry rose to his feet and touched it.

"Yes, it is swinging," he said. He stopped it, and held it quite still. Then he resumed his seat.

"Very well, Joan," he said with a new briskness in his voice, "we will make the experiment. Come! When we go to Buenos Ayres in the winter! We will try the other plan. Even if it fails it will be worth making."

Joan's face lighted up.

"If it fails, then we'll go home," she said.

No doubt the relief which Robert Daventry felt in the proof that his eyes were not failing him led him thus briskly to fall in with a scheme which both approached with timidity; and so the swinging of the chandelier had its share in bringing them to their decision. But the chandelier had not done with them. For hardly had Robert Daventry ceased to speak when it began again to swing backward and forward before their eyes. So it swung for exactly five minutes and then of its own accord it stopped.

"That's very strange," said Robert Daventry. He looked at the clock upon the mantle shelf. It was five minutes past eleven.

"It's unaccountable," he continued. But he was able to account for it the next day. For a local paper brought to them the news that at ten minutes to eleven o'clock on the evening before, seven hundred miles away on the other side of the great barrier of the Andes, an earthquake had set the shores of the Pacific heaving like a sea, and Valparaiso, that city of earthquakes, had tumbled into ruins.

II

OF AN EARTHQUAKE AND JAMES CHALLONER

THE experiences of James Challoner on that day of ruin at Valparaiso were various, but none of them were pleasant. It was his twenty-eighth birthday and up to two o'clock in the afternoon he was, as for the last six weeks he had been, a clerk in the great house of R. C. Royle & Sons. There was no sort of business in Chile which R. C. Royle & Sons were not prepared to undertake and carry through witn efficiency, from a colossal deal in nitrates to the forwarding home of your portmanteau. It was, to be sure, upon the latter class of work that James Challoner was asked to concentrate his abilities. But advancement was a principle of the house, and in the vast ramifications of its business, opportunities of advancement came quickly. James Challoner, who for five years had been drifting unsuccessfully up and down the Pacific Coast, between Callao and Concepcion, was consequently accounted a lucky man to have secured employment in that house at all.

"If he can only keep it!" said his friends, shrugging their shoulders, and his young wife, in the little house up the hill, bent over her child and whispered the same words. But in her mouth they were a prayer.

At two o'clock James Challoner returned from his luncheon to the office, but as he took his seat he was summoned to the manager's room. He walked down the long room between the tables on which samples of produce were exhibited, then past the cashier's brass-fenced desks where the banking business was done, to a little compartment partitioned off in a corner. There Wallace Bourdon, a young partner in control of this branch of the firm, sat in a tilted chair, with his knees against a table, awaiting him.

"Mr. Challoner, it is within your knowledge, I suppose, that we are negotiating with the Government at Santiago for the construction of a new railway in the north."

Challoner shook his head.

"That's not in my department, sir," he said.

"Quite true," said Wallace Bourdon. He opened a drawer of the table and threw half a dozen letters down on the top of it under Challoner's eyes. "These letters are copies of our proposals. There are two firms competing with us to which these copies would be valuable. They were found in your desk while you were out at luncheon. What were they doing there?"

James Challoner stared at the letters and pulled at his mustache.

"I can't think, sir. They must have been put there," he said, and then with a cry of indignation: "I must have an enemy in the office."

"Well, that's hard," said Wallace Bourdon sympathetically. "For he seems to have got back on you good and strong. You can draw your money from the cashier, Mr. Challoner, and clear out of this house just as soon as you can find it convenient"; and Wallace Bourdon dropped the legs of his chair onto the floor.

James Challoner took his money and went out into the town. He sat moodily on a high stool at a bar for an hour or so. Then some men of his acquaintance joined him, and from moody he became blusterful and boisterous. But both the moodiness and the bluster were phases of the one deep-seated feeling—a reluctance to go up the hill and meet his wife. It was seven o'clock before he had gained the necessary courage and when he did face his wife he followed the usual practice of his kind and blurted out aggressively the news of his dismissal.

"I was lowering myself by going into the office at all as a clerk," he cried. "I told you so when you urged me to do it. Upon my word it almost serves me right, Doris. I have never known any good come from a man's lowering himself. He is bound to make enemies amongst his new associates. Jealousy is a despicable thing, but there's a deal of it floating about in the world, and one's a fool to shut one's eyes to it. However, we can't let the business rest there. My honor's impugned. That's the truth of it, Doris. I lie under a dishonorable charge. There's a stigma on our child's name, and it must be removed."

He drew a chair briskly up to the table, pulled a piece of note-paper toward him, and dipped his pen in the ink.

"Let me see, now! Who can my enemy be? Who is it that hates me? Can't you think of some one?" and in an instant he pushed the blotting pad pettishly from him. "You might say something, Doris. You just stand and look and never open your mouth."

That was James Challoner's trouble, and the cause of his uneasiness. His wife neither buoyed him up with high-sounding phrases, nor afforded him the opportunity by any reproach to work himself into a fine heat of indignation. She had given him one dreadful look, her whole countenance a quivering cry of dismay made visible, and thereafter she had just stood with no word on her lips, her great eyes disconcertingly fixed upon his face and her mind quite hidden. She went out from the room and left him sitting in great discomfort. He detested her habit of silence, but he feared still more the thought of him which it might conceal, and he dared not break it with acrimonies. When she returned again into the room it was to say:

"Dinner is ready."

The Challoners had no servant, and now they would have none, though a servant had been almost hired that day. James Challoner gave no thought to that. Fear lest his wife should "lower herself" did not trouble him at all. During dinner he talked in self-defence, flurriedly, about his enemy, pointing vaguely to this man or to that, and watching keenly for some droop of disdain about Doris's lips. But she gave no sign, and at the back of all his thought was the wounding question:

"What does she think of me?"

He smoked his pipe outside the door after dinner, with the lighted streets of the town spread out below him. The house stood apart, high up on the great amphitheatre of hills above Valparaiso; and on the opposite side of the road the ground fell steeply. The great bay lay open beneath his eyes to the distant top of its northern horn; no inland pool could have slept more quietly than did the Pacific on that summer night; still water and mirrored stars, it widened out in the warm dusk to the sky's rim. A huge black steamer lay out beyond the edge of the jetty, with the light blazing from its saloon windows and the little lights steady on its masts. From the close-built streets at the water's edge there rose a pleasant murmur of many voices. No warnings were being given. Valparaiso, like any other tropical city, was taking its ease in the cool of the evening.

At ten o'clock James Challoner, having nothing better to do and no money to spend, went to bed. He locked the front door and with a definite relief found that his wife had already gone. He stood in the empty, barely furnished sitting-room, and his thoughts were swept back to the morning at Southampton, five years ago, when Doris had crept on board the steamer which was to take them to South America. He remembered bitterly the buoyant hopes with which that runaway marriage had begun and Doris's fears that her flight had been already discovered and that an attempt at the last moment might be made to stop her.

"It has been a bad mistake for me," he said, as all the wonderful things which he might have done, had he not been hampered with a wife, glittered in his mind. The truth, however, was not to be grasped by him unless he would face truthfully the history of his marriage, and that he was not constituted to do. It was a story common enough: A young man with no will and caressing manners, who was hastily packed off to South America, with a few hundred pounds in his pocket, to avoid exposure in his own country, and a young girl too staunch to her beliefs—these were the characters, and, given them, the story tells itself.

"Yes, it has all been a very bad mistake for me," thought James Challoner, and switching off the lights he betook himself to bed. A door in the inner wall of his bedroom opened into the room where his wife and child slept. He listened for a moment with his ear against the panel. All was silent in that room.

"She can sleep," he grumbled, finding even a grievance there, and within five minutes he slept himself. But he did not sleep for long. For, just at the moment when the chandelier began to swing in Mr. Daventry's dining-room, he was shaken out of his slumber. He lay for a few seconds in the vague and pleasant space between wakefulness and dreams, playing with the fancy that he was in a cabin on a ship at sea. But the fancy passed, and he was beset by a stranger illusion. He happened to be lying upon his side, with his face turned toward the outer wall of his bedroom; and as he lay he saw quite distinctly the wall gently and noiselessly split open. It split open high up and near to the ceiling, and it let through the stars and a strip of sky. Then the wall closed neatly together again, brick fitting with brick, so that not a chink was left. The room once more was black, the stars shut out.

Challoner was still pondering upon this remarkable phenomenon when a third sensation shook him altogether out of his lethargy. He was violently jolted. This could be no illusion. It was as if some one, crouching beneath the bed, had suddenly risen on hands and knees and struck the mattress with his shoulders. Challoner sprang out of bed, tottered, and clung to the bed-post for support. The room was rocking like a tree in a gale and underneath his feet the boards strained and heaved. It was his first experience of an earthquake, but he had no doubt that he was undergoing it, and fear made his hands grip the iron post of the bed so that his palms were bruised. His chief terror was the floor. The feel of it moving unstably beneath his feet, the sound of its boards cracking loosened his knees. At any moment it might burst upward and explode. At some moment and very soon it must. He had no fear that it would collapse and gape open; it would surely burst like a shell; and in his fear of that explosion the rocking of the walls was of no account.

He tried to think, and instinct reminded him of civilized man's chief necessities.

"My shoes, my money."

He groped along the bed for the switch of the light, but light did not answer to the summons. In the darkness he stooped, found his shoes, and slipped them on. His few dollars, drawn that afternoon from the cashier of R. C. Royle & Sons, were in the drawer of a night-table by his bed. He found them. There was a cupboard in the inner wall. He lurched across to it, and, tearing a long overcoat from a hook, slipped it on and dropped the money in his pocket. Close by the cupboard was the door of his wife's bedroom. He remembered her now, and flung the door open.

"Doris," he cried, and no answer was returned to him.

"Doris," he cried again, and this time the wail of his child answered him from her cot.

He crossed to the bed. He leaned over it and put out his hand to shake his wife by the shoulder out of her deep sleep. And with a shock he became aware that she was leaning upon her elbow in the darkness. She was wide-awake all the time.

"Quick!" he cried, in a sudden exasperation. "There is an earthquake. The house is falling."

She replied, in a strange quiet voice:

"I know."

She made no beginning of a movement. She was awake, had been, perhaps, longer awake than he himself; she knew the swift peril which had befallen them, and the need of hurry; yet she remained propped on her elbow in the darkness, passively expectant. Or was she dazed? Even at that moment the question flashed through Challoner's mind and brought him a queer relief. But it was answered in a moment.

"I called to you twice," he said; and his wife answered:

"I heard"; and there was again no hint of bewilderment in her voice. It was the voice of a woman who had all her wits about her; not of one who was stunned.

Meanwhile the earth rumbled beneath them and the room shook. Challoner felt for a candle by the bedside, struck a match and lighted it. His wife watched him quietly. Her dark eyes shone in the candle-light, inscrutably veiling her thoughts.

"Quick!" he cried. "Get up. There's no time to lose." He lifted the child out of the cot, still wrapped in her bedclothes.

"Come."

His wife rose, as it seemed to him, with incredible slowness. He could have screamed in his terror. As he stumbled across the floor to the door, she opened a wardrobe and, taking out a cloak, drew it about her shoulders. In the doorway he turned and saw her.

'Good God!" he cried, and the question in his mind leaped to his lips and was uttered. "Do you want to kill us all?"

"I had to find a cloak."

"A cloak!" he cried contemptuously. He himself had tarried to slip on his overcoat, but, no doubt, that was different. Certainly his wife made no rejoinder. "To be buried under this house for the sake of a cloak," he cried, his lips so chattering with terror that he could hardly pronounce the words.

"Go first," she said; and he ran out of the doorway. She followed him, leaving the door open behind her, and the candle burning in the room. They were still in the passage when an appalling roar deafened their ears. The lighted candle shot up into the air and was extinguished, and in the darkness the splitting of timber, the overthrow and the wreckage of furniture, rent the air and ceased. Of a sudden the throats of the fugitives were choked with dust. The fear which had so terrified him was justified. The floor had exploded, like artillery, in the room he had this moment quitted. His terror became a panic. He would have killed his wife had she stood in his way. He rushed downstairs, inarticulately crying. He fumbled in the darkness for the bolt of the front door, sobbing and cursing. He found it, flung the door open, and leaped out into the open air. He ran across the road, and as he ran a great stone fell with a crash from the archway of the door, and the walls of the passage clashed together behind him. With a loud clatter of thunder the whole house crumbled down into a smoking heap of bricks. Challoner turned. He was quite alone with the child in his arms. And for a little while he stood very still.

But he was no longer in darkness. About many of the villas on the hillside the flames were creeping, and their inhabitants were racing upward to the open heights, or searching desperately among the ruins for those whom the earthquake had entrapped. While lower down by the water's edge the city was ablaze and over all the bay the sky was red. The ground still shook beneath Challoner's feet, and the child in his arms began to cry. He laid it down against the low wall of the path and crept cautiously back to the ruins of his house.

"Doris," he called, and again, "Doris."

His voice was low, but there was more of awe than grief audible in the cry. "Doris," he called a third time, but in a louder and more urgent tone. A few bricks, hanging to a fragment of wall, dislodged themselves and clattered down upon the heap of ruin. But no other answer came. He stooped suddenly where the archway of the entrance door had been. The great stone had fallen with so much force that one end had sunk into the ground; the other, however, rested upon a fragment of the stone pillar of the door; and so the stone lay under a pile of bricks tilted at an angle. Through the space left by the angle a woman's hand and arm protruded. It was not pinned down by the stone. It pointed with limp fingers toward Challoner, and beside it a trickle of blood ran out. Challoner knelt and touched the hand.

"Doris," he said.

Her voice had not answered to his, and now there was no response in her fingers to his touch. The arm moved quite easily. The walls of the passage had borne her down and crushed her. Challoner remembered with a shiver the crash and clatter of them as they had knocked together just behind his heels. His wife had been killed in that downfall. She could not have survived.

Challoner rose again to his feet.

"She was awake," he said, and he talked aloud to himself. "She should have hurried. She could have escaped had she hurried"; and the picture of her leaning upon her elbow in her bed in the dark troubled his soul. There is no terror like the terror which comes from the shaking of the earth and the overthrow of its houses. Yet she, a woman—so ran his thoughts—had endured it. Her hand pointing, from beneath the stones, accused him for all the limpness of its fingers. She had welcomed it.

The child wailed from the other side of the road. Challoner crossed to it. He stood and looked at it doubtfully. Still in doubt, he looked away. From the blazing town rose a babel of cries, a roar of flames, a crash of buildings falling in, and every now and then, quite distinct from the confusion, a shrill, clear scream would leap into the air like a thin fountain of water. But the sea was calm; the great ship, with every cord of its rigging strung black against the glowing sky, lay without a movement. Boats were plying between it and the shore. Challoner could see the tiny specks of them on the red water.

"There's no tidal wave," he said in a dull voice. "That's extraordinary"; and then he picked up his daughter in his arms, and climbed higher up the hill to await the dawn.

III

CHALLONER'S PILGRIMAGE

THERE were two more shocks that night, the first at five minutes past one, the second half an hour before sunrise. James Challoner sat in the centre of the most open space he could find, his overcoat drawn close about him and his daughter clasped tightly to his breast. But it was almost unconsciously that he held her so. His brain was dazed, and the only image at all clear in his mind was that of his dead wife's hand protruding beneath the great stone and directing against him its mute accusations. But, even so, it was the limp look of the fingers which chiefly troubled him, and it only troubled him from time to time. For the greater part of the interval before daybreak he sat watching the roofs of the buildings below him burst in tongues of fire and topple down with a clatter of slates in bright showers of sparks, much as a child sits open-mouthed at the fireworks. Now he huddled his coat close about him, now some spire of flame towering skyward more terribly beautiful than the rest, drew a cry from his lips; and now again, looking out over the quiet pond of the bay, he asked dully, "Why is there no tidal wave?"

Morning came at last over the hill behind, gray and extraordinarily cold. All about him he saw people, huddled like himself upon the slopes, men, women and children, shivering in their night-attire and their bare feet bloody from the stones. All at once Challoner was aware that he was hungry. His little daughter reached out her arms and wailed. Hunger, too, as the sun rose, mastered the fears of the refugees upon the hill-side. One by one, group by group, they rose stiffly and straggled down to the ruined ways by the water-side. Challoner went with the rest; and half-way down they all began to hurry, beset by the same fear. There would not be food enough for all. The thought seemed to sweep like a wind across the face of the hill, and the hurry became savage.

Along the open esplanade families were squatting side by side. A few of the more fortunate had somehow secured and erected tents; and others were crowded into storage sheds. But the most of them were sitting in the open waiting desolately for they knew not what. And already in that town, though the earthquake was barely six hours old, catastrophe had made its sharp division between the sheep and the goats. For whereas upon the esplanade men and women, and amongst them many unexpected figures, were already organizing succor for the outcasts, amongst the smoking ruins the marauders were already at work, robbing, murdering. There was no longer any law in Valparaiso.

Challoner made his way to the esplanade. A man whom he knew, the agent of a steamship company, hurried past him. Challoner stopped him.

"Where can I get food?" he asked.

Challoner was a strongly built, tall man, and the agent answered roughly.

"You? You will have to wait. You are able to"; and then he caught sight of the child in Challoner's arms, still wrapped about with her bedclothes. His voice changed to friendliness.

"Yours?" he asked.

Challoner nodded.

"Where's its mother?"

Challoner answered simply:

"Dead."

The agent took out a piece of paper and a pencil from his pocket. "Sorry," he said. "Of course, that alters the case." He wrote a line upon the paper and gave it to Challoner. Then he pointed to a tin-shed, around which a crowd was already collecting.

"We are distributing a little food there. You'll be given your share, for you have a child to look after. But I should advise you to look slippy"; and the agent hurried off.

Challoner did look slippy. Because of his child he got food for himself as well as for his child; and as he sat on the ground, in the shadow of a low wall, after his meal, that fact set him thinking. There is much loving kindness for children in South America. From east to west it runs across the continent, just as from east to west human life is cheap, provided that it is grown up. You might, anywhere in those days, and, in some places you may still, slay your neighbor and avoid anything like excessive inconvenience as a result of your slaying. But if you kick a boy into the gutter because he refuses to desist from whistling, to your distraction, outside your office window, you are liable to be fined heavily, and you may be sent to prison. For you have hurt the dignitad d'ombre. Challoner was aware generally of the consideration for children which prevailed. But now it was brought very practically home to him in the particular. His little daughter Doris was a definite asset to him. He looked down upon her with new eyes as she slept on the ground at his side, with a chubby hand thrown across his knee. She was no longer a nuisance. She was as good as money—better, indeed, since money could not buy food to-day in Valparaiso. And there had been a moment when he had stood doubting, up there before the ruins of his house. James Challoner was quite chilled by the thought of the mistake he had almost made, and the fool he had almost been.

Doris moved her head in her sleep.

"Precious one," he said affectionately; and he proceeded in his turn to sleep.

He woke up in time to see the two great Chilian cruisers sweep round the point into the bay, and a stoutly built, square captain, whom he could have mistaken for an Englishman, come ashore with his sailors, to take command of the town. He obtained shelter in a hut for that night, and during the hours of darkness he thought out his own immediate problem.

Valparaiso was not and for some months would not be. Even when it should be rebuilt there would be no work for him, since—in his thoughts he clung to euphemisms—his enemies had ruined his good name. Therefore he must get away and he had his daughter at his hand to assist him.

He obtained, through his good samaritan, the agent, a rough suit for himself and some clothing for his child and a parcel of food. He slung the parcel over his shoulders, lifted his child in his arms, and walked out that afternoon from Valparaiso up the great post-road toward the Andes. He was strong and his girl inherited of his strength. It was summer, a summer of no rain. He tramped along the valleys of Chile, and his daughter was his passport and franked his way. He secured a night's shelter at a farmhouse here, food and a trifle of money there, a ride for Doris upon a mule one day, a lift for both of them in a cart the next. The valley narrowed, the green floor of it became stones, the trees thinned, the great barrier of the cordilleras closed in about James Challoner and towered higher and higher above his head. The road wound sharply upward, now backward, and forward in a desolate, wild country of gray rock splashed with orange and yellow and deep red. He had started early that day and stood on the top of the Cumbre Pass, thirteen thousand feet above the sea, by mid-day. On the very summit he was overtaken by the post and driven down at a gallop to Las Cuevas. From Las Cuevas he walked to Punta del Inca. And at Punta del Inca he took his ease for a week, with the great snow-mass of Aconcagua showing in a gap of the hills across the valley.

It was the season of the baths at Punta del Inca. The hotel was full and James Challoner prospered, as from the beginning he had thought that he would. He had reckoned upon Punta del Inca on that night in Valparaiso when he had determined upon his journey. He sat by the natural bridge, with his little daughter in his arms, a travel-stained and patient figure, and amongst those gigantic hills he told his moving story to such as passed and would listen. He went up to the hotel at night, and under the lights of the veranda he told it again. Amongst his many qualities which he misused was a vivid gift of narrative, and he possessed, at this time at all events, a gentle voice with an admirable note of emotion. Thus all was in his favor. The beauty and peace of the scenery, his manner, the prettiness of his child—even the story which he had to tell. But it was not quite the story which would have been told at Valparaiso where, to be sure, he had, as we know, enemies.

"Why did you come to South America?" some curious soul would ask.

"I was a younger son," he would answer; and then, with a charming modesty for the benefit of any English who might be present, "I am of the Dorsetshire Challoners. These old properties. . . . Land isn't what it was . . . An estate mortgaged to the hilt. How could any one take an allowance that must be wrung from it at the cost of the very laborers? No, I thought I would make my own way in the new lands."

He spoke without any arrogance of virtue, any contempt for other younger sons who had not his own compunction, any consciousness of heroism. He went on to tell the romantic story of his marriage and elopement.

"I made my way," he continued, "at least I was making it. My wife, of course, helped me—" and perhaps here his voice would falter ever so slightly, he would turn his face aside and whisper to the stars, yet so that the whisper was audible to people nearer than the stars—"My God, how she helped me! We had dug out our little corner in Valparaiso. There was just room in it for a wife and a child and myself. And then the earthquake came and ruined all."

He made no complaint; he stated the simple facts; he was reticent concerning his wife's death. But by his reticence he managed to wring from it the last ounce of profit; he did not, for instance, describe how he had found her leaning upon her elbow in the darkness, with the walls of her room tottering about her. James Challoner had not forgiven her for that. She had made it so plain that she preferred for her child and herself an appalling death beneath the bricks than the slower decline into misery which awaited them. He tried to omit that remembrance from his mind, as he certainly did from his story.

A collection was made for him to send him on his way. He accepted it with dignity.

"I do not ask for your names," he said. "It would be the merest pretence. I cannot promise to pay you back. I take it as from one man to another." And so with his pocket full he journeyed downward to the vineyards of Mendoza.

At Mendoza he took the train and in a night and a day came to Buenos Ayres. It was in the cool of the evening that he stepped out upon the platform. He was in no doubt what he should do. He had stopped in Buenos Ayres for a month on his way out from England; and he had thought out his plan very carefully during his last night in Valparaiso. He took a train for Barracas, and in the train he tied an old bootlace about his daughter's arm. He left the train before it crossed the bridge, and walked up a hill where great houses stand back behind walls and gardens much as one may see them in Clapham. Some way up the hill he stopped in front of one of these houses.

It was noticeable amongst the houses, because a curious turnstile was let into the garden wall. The turnstile supported a small circular platform partitioned off with screens. James Challoner placed his child upon the platform, rang the bell, and turned the stile. The platform revolved, the child disappeared from view within the garden, and the screens were so arranged that those who received the child within could not see James Challoner outside.

James Challoner went back into the middle of the road, yawned, and stretched his arms above his head. To-day you may cross the Andes from Valparaiso to Buenos Ayres in forty-eight hours. James Challoner had taken four months. He thought of his journey with a chuckle. His daughter had made his way easy.

"Nine hundred miles and I've done 'em on eider-down," he said. "That's the only bit of comfort I've ever got out of my marriage."

He had left his child in a foundling hospital kept by some wealthy old ladies. He had tied a bootlace round her arm, rather because it was the conventional thing to do, than with any intention of reclaiming her. He was now a free man. He lit his pipe and stuck his hands in his pockets. With a pleasant sense of lightness, he strolled down to exploit his freedom in the bright streets of Buenos Ayres.

IV

CYNTHIA'S BIRTHDAY

Cynthia woke on the eighth of January to the knowledge that a thrilling day for her had just begun. She looked out beneath the sun blinds across the Daventry estancia. Not a hand-breadth of cloud was visible. The brown earth baked under a blinding sun and the sky fitted down upon it like a cap of brass. Inside the room, however, there was neither glare nor heat; and Cynthia stood with her expectations of the day fluttering about her like a shower of rose leaves. She was seventeen this morning, and the pride of it set her heart dancing. There would be letters downstairs from her friends, she hoped. There was a string of pearls, she knew. It had been bought that winter in Buenos Ayres with so elaborate a secrecy, and after so much furtive discussion as to whether it was good enough, that she could not but know of it. Moreover, there was a most important telegram to be despatched immediately after breakfast; a telegram of so much consequence that no hand but hers must write it out and send it off. So Cynthia was quick this morning. She dressed herself in a cool white frock, her white shoes and stockings, and ran lightly down the stairs into that room where years before a chandelier had of its own accord swung to and fro.

Valparaiso had long since been rebuilt, but Robert and Joan Daventry still kept house in Buenos Ayres through the winter, and made the estancia their summer home. The years, however, had brought their changes. Robert and Joan were frankly an old couple nowadays; a young Englishman was sitting at the breakfast table; he undertook the whole burden of management; and, finally, there was Cynthia. The "other plan," so often debated and so often shelved, had been adopted, after all; the experiment from which Robert Daventry had so shrunk had been risked; and Cynthia was the triumphant flower of it.

She greeted the old couple tenderly, shook hands with Richard Walton, the young manager, and received his good wishes with a pretty assumption of great dignity. But her eyes strayed to the table, where her place was piled high with parcels and letters, and her dignity vanished in her delight.

"I have many friends," she cried, with a sort of wonder in her voice very taking to those who looked on her while she spoke. For she could not but have friends, it seemed. So frank a wish to please and so sweet a modesty were linked to so much beauty. It was not the beauty of Argentina, though a rhapsodist might have maintained that some of its sunlight was held prisoner in the heavy ripples of her hair. But the hair was light brown in color, where the gold did not shine, and the rose was in her cheeks. A broad forehead, eyebrows thick and brown, curving across a fair skin above great eyes of a deep blue set rather wide apart, gave to her face a curious distinction. And her eyes looked out from so dark a wealth of lashes that they seemed unfathomable with mysteries—until she spoke. Then kindliness and a fresh joy in life lit them with soft fires. For the rest, she was neither short nor remarkable for height, the nose and the nostrils delicate, the chin small, but a definite chin. As for her mouth, it was not a rosebud, nor again was it a letter-box. It suited her and she could afford to smile. One granted her, at a glance, health and a look of race.

She began to open her letters and her presents. "Yes, I have many friends," she repeated.

"It may be surprising," said Robert Daventry. "But it seems to be true. In fact, I am not quite sure that I have not some small token about me that Joan and I don't dislike you altogether."

He fumbled first in one pocket, then in another.

"Really!" cried Cynthia. She leaned toward him, all eagerness and curiosity. Her lips were parted in a smile. She followed the movements of his hands with an air of suspense. She knew very well that half the pleasure of the givers would be spoilt if she betrayed any acquaintance with the gift.

"What can it be?" Her whole attitude asked, while Robert Daventry slapped himself and looked under the table in a great fluster lest he should have mislaid the present. His concern was sheer farce; she, with a subtle skill of comedy, played her little part of happy impatience.

"Ah!" cried Robert Daventry at last. "It is not lost"; and he took out from his breast pocket a narrow case of green leather and from the white satin lining of the case the expected string of pearls. She stood up while Robert Daventry clasped it about her throat, and, as she took her seat again, she said in a low voice:

"You are both extraordinarily kind to me. I often wonder what would have become of me but for you—where I should be now."

For a moment both of the old people looked startled. Then Robert Daventry hastened to protest:

"My dear," he cried in a flurry, "you are, after all, of my flesh and blood. And flesh and blood has its claims." Joan's quiet voice came to his help:

"Besides, the debt is not all on one side, Cynthia. We were not very contented until you came to us, were we, Robert?"

"No, we weren't," he replied with relief, like a man floundering who finds solid ground under his feet. "We had lived hard and had done a great deal of work, and we were beginning to ask ourselves why. The heat and the ardor were over, you see. Our lives were cooling down. We had come to a time when one is apt to sit at night over the fire and wonder regretfully, now that no change is possible, whether we hadn't aimed at the wrong things and got less than we might have got out of our lives. We had piled up, and were still piling up a great deal more money than we had any use for. We had made Daventry out of a plain as bare as the palm of my hand, and we had no one very dear to us to whom we could leave it. There didn't seem to be much use in things. Next week was going to be like this week, and the week after like next week, and life altogether nothing more than a succession of dull things. We were very nearly abandoning the estancia and retiring to England when my brother died."

"And left me to you," said Cynthia.

Robert Daventry nodded.

"And then our discontent vanished," said he.

Cynthia shook her head.

"I don't remember very much of those days, but I remember enough to be sure that I gave you a good deal of trouble." She spoke lightly to hide the emotion which the kindness of these friends had stirred in her.

Joan Daventry smiled.

"Yes, you gave us trouble, Cynthia," she said. "We are frightened by it still, at times. We are growing old and there is no other young spirit in the house, and it is possible that you might find your life rather dull, just as we did before you came to us."

"Dull?" cried Cynthia. "With you two dear people?" She held a hand lovingly to each, and now was hiding nothing of what she felt. "Besides, I have my friends. I meet them in Buenos Ayres. They come here to visit me. You gave them to me, as you have given me everything. Look at the number of them!" and she proudly pointed to her letters. She read them through and she breakfasted, and at the end of the meal gathered them in her hands.

"I must send some telegrams," she said. "I will drive to the railway station."

"Now?" Joan Daventry asked anxiously. "Can't they be sent later, in the afternoon, Cynthia?"

"No, mother," Cynthia replied. "Some might wait, but there's one which must go off now."

Joan Daventry looked at Richard Walton. The blinds were down and the window closed; so that the room was dark and cool. But a glance at her manager's face told her sufficiently what the heat was like outside. He had been abroad since daybreak and he was the color of a ripe mulberry. Joan Daventry looked to him for assistance. But, though his eyes were fixed with a momentary intentness upon Cynthia, he did not give it. He spoke on another subject.

"If you go, Miss Cynthia, I hope you will leave at home the pearls you are wearing round your throat. We are cutting the corn to-day and there are a good many men about of whom I know nothing at all. More hands came in last night than we had use for. It's all right, of course, but I shouldn't wear those pearls."

"Of course not," said Cynthia. "I will put them away."

"And you will take a man with you," said Robert Daventry. Neither he nor Joan had been brought up in cotton-wool; nor did they ever think to cloister Cynthia. She was left her liberty; and so half an hour afterward, with a big straw hat shading her face from the sun, she drove in her cart along the avenue to the railway station. She sent off the messages of thanks and then wrote out the important telegram which was to mark the day for her. She wrote it out without an alteration. For her thoughts had run fastidiously on the wording of it all through breakfast-time. She addressed it to:

CAPTAIN RAMES, R N.,
S.S. Perhaps,
Tilbury Docks,
London.

And she handed it to the operator with a certain trepidation like one who does some daring and irrevocable deed. The operator, however, was quite unmoved. The important message to which so much consideration had been given, wore to him quite a commonplace look. It amounted, indeed, to no more than this:

"Every heart-felt wish for a triumphant journey, from an unknown friend in South America."

Thus, the very words were conventional and the sentiment no great matter to make a fuss about. But this was not Cynthia's point of view.

She had spoken the truth at the breakfast table when she had told Joan and Robert Daventry that she did not find her life dull. But they were old people, and, in spite of her many friends, she was, to be sure, much alone with them. She was reticent of her feelings in their presence, not through any habit of concealment, but from modesty and the disparity of years. On the other side it was Joan's theory that youth should be trusted rather than pried upon. Cynthia was thus thrown back a good deal upon herself, and if she did not find life dull, it was, perhaps, because with life she had very little to do. She was seventeen, a girl of clear eyes and health and silver thoughts; and romance had its way with her. All that loving care could imagine for the clean and delicate training of mind and body had been lavished on her; and little by little she had fashioned for herself a wonderland of dreams and beautiful things. The only ugly thing about it was the iron turnstile in the wall by which you gained admittance. But that could not be helped. Its ugliness was recognized. The turnstile had been there from the beginning—why, Cynthia could not have told you. It was indeed itself the beginning. It was there in her dreams and her fancies, offering admission to somewhere, before the somewhere was explored, and found to be the wonderland.

In this world, then, she moved amidst a very goodly company. She was careful about her company, choosing it from the world at large. She claimed the best of all the nations for her friends, yet with a pretty shyness which often enough set her blushing and laughing at her own pretension. She had a test. Unless you answered to it, there was no admission, the turnstile did not revolve. Coronets went for nothing, even brave deeds did not suffice. He who entered—and, by the way, it must regretfully be admitted that "he" does accurately represent the sex of those who were allowed to enter. For it had never occurred to Cynthia at all to let another woman into her world. She was modest, but her modesty had its limits. He who entered, then, must have given proof that he was possessed with a definite idea, that his life moved to the tune of it.

The population of Cynthia's private enclosure was consequently strictly limited; and, since she only knew her heroes through the newspaper and books, some even of those who were admitted came in under false pretences, and had summarily to be ejected. She was thus on the look-out for recruits. Captain Rames was the latest of them, and Cynthia knew less of him even than of the others. She had seen a blurred portrait of him in a daily paper; she knew that he was an officer in the navy, aged thirty-four, and it seemed to her that he had passed her test. For, this very afternoon, in command of a Dundee whaler, he was off southward into seas where no ship yet had sailed.

The clerk stamped her telegram and took it behind the partition into his office. Cynthia climbed back into her cart.

"I will drive back across the farm," she said. "I want to see the reaping."

At the end of the short, wide street of one-storied huts and houses she turned through a gate in a wire fence onto a wide plain of brown grass. A mile across the plain, separated by no fence or hedge, the glistening acres of wheat began, and at the edge Cynthia could see little men seated on reaping-machines drawn by little horses like toys. She drove toward them thinking of the telegram, and, with a blush under her straw hat, of its reception. As a matter of fact, Captain Rames was rather busy that day, and anonymous telegrams did not receive from him the attention which was no doubt their due. In three hours' time, she thought, Captain Rames might be wondering what his unknown friend was like, with a heart full of gratitude for her unknown friendship. Meanwhile, she was driving nearer and nearer to the little toys at the edge of the wheat-field. The little toys were growing larger and larger. Cynthia came out of her rose-mist.

"There are some new machines," she said, with interest, to the man who was with her. He was an old half-breed who had been long on the estate.

"Yes, Senorita," he answered. He pointed to one longer than the rest and drawn by six horses. "It does everything. It cuts, it ties in sheaves."

The whirring of the machinery came louder and louder to their ears. The young horse which she was driving cocked its ears and became restive. She gave the reins to the servant.

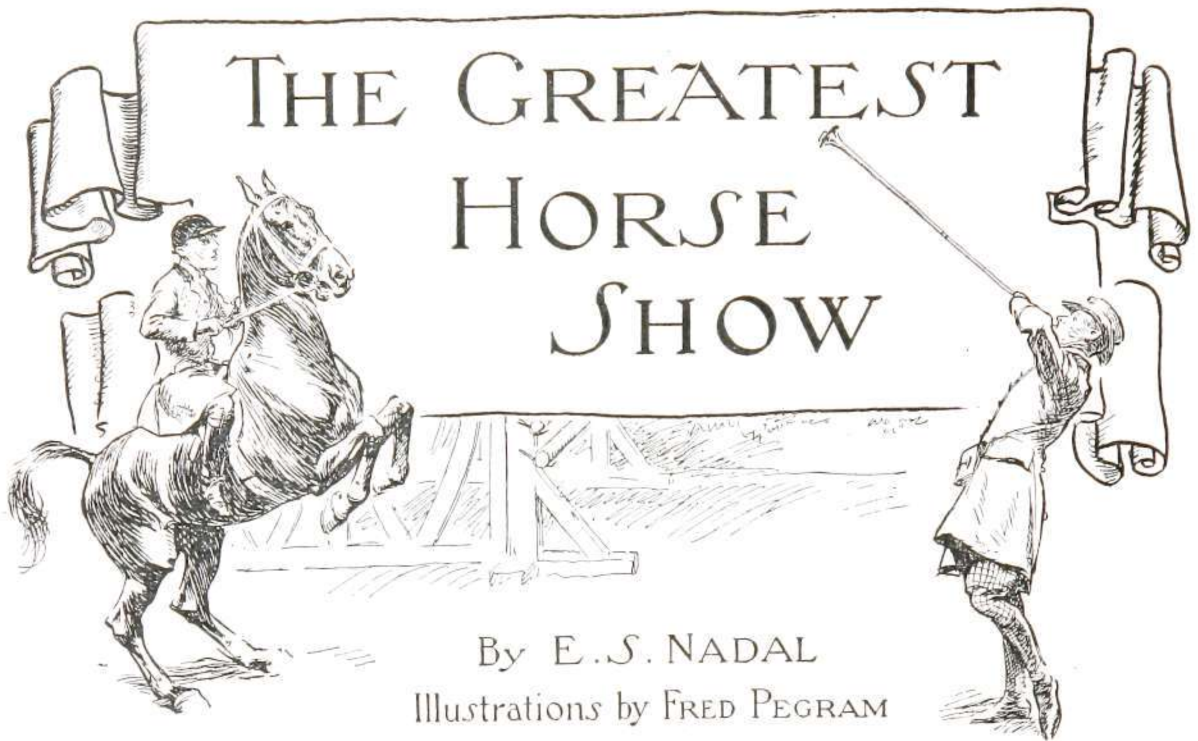
"I will walk forward," she said. "You can wait here." She descended to the ground. She walked forward toward the edge of the wheat. There realities awaited her.

(To be continued.)

A CHARACTER

By Brian Hooker

THE heart of life is hid from him;
He has no ear for overtones,
No eye for blended hues or dim;
Therefore he learns a name for each,
Dockets our laughter and our moans,
And hurries forth to judge and teach—
The heart of life is hid from him.



THE International Horse Show held this year in London was perhaps the greatest horse show ever held. The London International is, no doubt, the greatest horse show in the world, and, this being the coronation year, and the show coming in the coronation week, great efforts were made that it should surpass previous international shows. A larger number of horses were entered, prizes more numerous and of greater value were offered, and it was expected that the attendance would be larger and more brilliant than ever before, which has indeed proved to be the case. The International show is, as every one knows, an indoor show held at Olympia, Kensington.

The arrangement of the building is very sensible. At one end of it, a large space had been set apart for the stables. These were prettily decorated with festoons of flowers. One exhibitor, a Canadian, had put up an imitation of a stable of the time of Elizabeth, of which our artist has made a sketch. On three sides of the building, between the main hall and the outer walls, there is a broad passage, with refreshment rooms, shops, etc. Nothing could be prettier than the decoration of the main hall. On the walls there was a representation of a Tudor village, with such houses as the reader may have seen at Old Chester. Beyond and above the village, there were English hills, like those in the Lake country. The doors of the west entrance, through which the horses came from the stables into the ring, showed an old English Inn, named in compliment to Lord Lonsdale, I suppose, "The Lowther Arms." There was a profusion of the choicest flowers everywhere, and these were renewed from day to day. The show of flowers must have been made at great expense. For instance, on each side of the jump known as the "railway crossing" was a Teddy Bear. They were boxwood plants, cut down to represent a bear, and were of life size. Each of these cost, perhaps, ten pounds. They were removed at the time of the King's visit and replaced by designs more specially appropriate in the form of crowns.

I found the little shops and booths in the passage, outside the main hall, highly decorative and very amusing. There were flower shops and gold and silversmiths, but most of them had some connection with horses. There was, for instance, a shop for sporting weathercocks, such as go on stables, a hunter mounted at one end and his dogs at the other. One weathercock was the Viking ship presented by Queen Alexandra to King Haakon, of Norway. One shop for breeches and riding habits had a real horse and a real pony, upon which to be measured for, and try on, riding clothes. It is happiness enough for a boy to mount that very well-bred wooden horse with sharp withers and high head in a certain shop in Oxford Street. But a real horse! What would a boy think of that? There was a restaurant, a grill-room and a tea-room. Now if it had been an American show of such pretensions as this one, it would have been thought necessary to have a café with Waldorf prices. But the grill-room had such cosey prices as chop 1/, leg of chicken 1/, wing 1/6, fish salad (very nice) 11*d.*, egg 2*d.*, and so on.

The Elizabethan stable

The foreign officers were a very noticeable feature of the show. There were some fifty of them, and they were always in uniform. When they were not riding, they usually sat together in a large box, just under the Royal box, and from their seats made a display that was in extent and coloring highly decorative. In the jumping competitions, they rode in uniform, and you soon became familiar enough with the caps, tunics, and breeches of the various countries represented to be able to tell from their dress the nationalities of the horsemen. In the jumping competitions the French and the Russians did best, with the British officers third. It was to the credit of British fair play that the applause was quite as great when a foreigner made a clean performance as when it was made by an Englishman. The applause was indeed too liberal. It sometimes excited and confused the horses. It should have been, of course, reserved till the horse had completed his round of jumps. Captain d'Exe, a Russian, won the George V Cup. His horse was an ordinary trooper's horse and of no particular known breed. On the day of the King's visit, His Majesty, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, came down into the ring, when the Russian officer rode into the ring, and, dismounting, was congratulated on his achievement by the King. Later in the same day there was a competition for the Edward VII Cup, which was won by Lieutenant Horment, a French officer on L'Ami II. The same officer had a gray upon which I should like to have seen him win, an animal with a beautiful way of moving and taking the jumps. All the horsemen seemed to like him. I think that horsemen, no matter what their specialities and interests in horseflesh may be, are ready to see and acknowledge excellence in almost any kind of a horse. A harness-horse man, for instance, will see the good points, or at any rate the central essential qualities of a hunter. The good horseman has an instinct which speaks when something really nice appears. The judging of the jumpers, however, did not permit the consideration of the general characteristics of the horses. It was simply a matter of "faults," as I suppose it must be. The horse that cleared all the jumps was perfect, the animal that touched only one hurdle in going over was next, and so on. The Russian winner of the George V Cup was second in this competition.

There was a great deal of jumping, and it became, perhaps, a little monotonous, but it is what the crowd likes. It would have been better, I think, to have had rather more purely military displays, such, for instance, as the exhibition of riding given by the German officers before the King on the occasion of his visit, which was a beautiful display of fine riding and fine horses. The Emperor of Germany had sent over these horses, which were all of German breeding, being the result of the crossing of thoroughbreds upon the native horses. The breeding has evidently been carried on with characteristic German intelligence and thoroughness. The troop was led by Lieutenant Platen, said to be the best rider in the German army, an officer in the white uniform of a cuirassier, mounted upon a most beautiful chestnut charger. It is scarcely necessary to say that the horses all had long tails. One circumstance rather surprised me. I had frequently noticed during the show that officers rose to the trot. A cavalryman has always been supposed to sit down to that gait. This has been thought necessary, because it would be quite out of the question for a rider to rise with a dangling sword attached to his waist. That difficulty has now been got over, however, by attaching the sword to the saddle. Rising to the trot for park riding is easier to the rider and better looking, and it may have advantages even to a cavalryman. It is said to require less exertion than sitting down. I remember once riding in company with a very experienced horseman, and, as the day was cold, I was trying to get warm by rising high in the stirrups. My acquaintance said, "Sit down and bump, and you will be warm." I tried it and found it was so, which looks as if rising to trot were less exertion than sitting down. Nevertheless, it does not seem the right form for a cavalryman, and I was surprised to find it done by the German officers. I was told, however, that they would not have done this at home.

Our American officers at the show, I noticed, sat down to the trot. A half-dozen of our officers came over with their horses, and they did well for a beginning. They had very little time to prepare for the show and to get the horses together. When the invitation came, Major Foltz went to the War Department and explained that it would be necessary for our cavalry to follow the lead of the mounted services of other countries by entering upon these competitions and that a beginning ought to be made. Accordingly, a few horses were got together, partly belonging to the government and partly to the competing officers, and in part contributed by Americans, who had a patriotic interest in having the country

A favorite show-ring seat

make as good an appearance at the show as was possible under the circumstances. To have a chance of winning in these competitions, horses must have a very special training, and the horses of the officers of the other nationalities had had this training. It is especially necessary to teach the horses to clear obstacles with their hind legs. European horses have been taught to do this by the use of certain artificial contrivances, which cause them to hit their hind legs if they do not lift them high enough. But a horse that has not been trained in this manner quickly discovers that he can with impunity strike the bars of the loose hurdles with his hind legs, and he does it. Our horses, of course, did a good deal of this, as almost all of the horses did.

An interesting American horse, ridden by one of our officers, was Khaled, a chestnut stallion. He is by one of the Arabs in the Huntington stud at Oyster Bay, Long Island, recently owned by the New York artist and horseman, Mr. Sewell, the dam a thoroughbred. The officer bought and trained this horse. He is a very handsome animal, especially Arab in appearance. It is for this reason, I suppose, and from the fact that he is as handy as a polo pony that, in seeing him from my seat, I supposed he was a small horse. When I stood alongside of him I found he was well over sixteen hands and weighed at least twelve hundred pounds. I noticed that his trot was better than you ever see in a full-bred Arab, or that you often see in a thoroughbred. I was sorry, I may say here, that there was no class for Arabs at the show. I should like to have seen an exhibition of the beautiful animals which were shown me a few years ago at his place in Sussex by Mr. Wilfrid Blunt, the first expert in England on Arabs and one of the first in Europe. When you speak of breeding true to type, there you had it. They seemed to be all struck off the same die. It is ungrateful of us not to bear in mind the service which the Arab has been in the creation of the modern horse. Then they are so beautiful and attractive they are sure to please the fresh and unsophisticated taste of the public. There is, however, no class for them at our own show in New York.

Before the jumping began, a rather pretty piece of business was carefully enacted. I mention it as showing the care of the management for picturesque effects. A team of four big, handsome bays, ridden by postilions, pulled into the ring a heavy wagon, containing the timber to be set up for the jumps. This team was preceded by a postilion riding a big cock horse, I presume you would call him. He stopped at each place where a jump was to be put up and seemed to oversee the erection of it. Two jumps on each side were put up. There were other jumps down the middle of the ring, which remained standing, the course for the harness horses and hacks being outside of these. These jumps represented a sheep pen, an Irish fence, from the top of which horses jumped downward and a railroad crossing with the bars down. These stationary jumps were buried in flowers.

I heard a Guardsman, who is a great horseman, asked if he had been at the horse show. He replied that he had not, that he had heard it was a flower show. It was, as I have said, a beautiful flower show. The floral display at the show had been so pretty that I wanted to see what Olympia would look like with nothing but flowers. The Annual Flower Show was given there the week following the horse show. This I attended, interested, however, quite as much in the people as in the flowers. I was curious to see whether I could differentiate a flower show crowd from a horse show crowd. I cannot say that I quite succeeded in this endeavor. The horse show crowd was perhaps the smarter. I did not find much that was distinctive at the flower show. I have somewhere read that a fondness for flowers and an interest in their cultivation is a sure mark of refinement of mind, and I should think it would be so. But then, on the other hand, it has always seemed to me that people receive an education in refinement of perception from a study of horses. And an education also results from this study in refinement and correctness of expression. I have often been surprised by the literary delicacy and truth of the epithets hit upon by quite uneducated men in describing the qualities of horses.

The classes for saddle-hacks were very full, and they contained many beautiful horses. Bred on thoroughbred lines, they had, of course, beautiful fronts, and the long tails which most of them carried seemed to balance beautifully their fine long necks and sloping shoulders. When they came to move, the walk and canter were right, but to my eyes scarcely one of them had a good saddle trot. If I made any exception, it would be in the case of the ponies, which seemed better in the trot than the larger horses. An extremely good horsewoman, of a very smart appearance, took a first prize with a handsome chestnut. I had seen this lady a few years ago at a charming little local show at Newbury, where I stopped for a few hours on my way back from the Bath show, riding a thoroughbred mare, with which it seemed impossible to find any fault, an animal that afterward took a championship at Olympia. But I was greatly disappointed by her new mount. The horse's trot was so short that I am quite sure that he could not have won in any good American show. The lady, by the way, in riding this horse, did not rise to the trot, and I supposed that the trot was too short to rise to. But later I saw her riding a horse with a fairly long step, and she still sat down to the trot. I noticed that several other ladies did the same. So here is a new fashion in this country of fashion and of form. The trot of the English hacks is not good, because they do not bend their hocks. That is because the thoroughbred, from which they come directly, does not bend his hocks. Of course there are exceptions, but this is true of nearly all thoroughbreds and of the great majority of hunters and half-bred hacks. Looking on from the stand at that beautiful outdoor show at Dublin, I was thoughtless enough to say to the man next me that I had seen eleven hundred hunters at that show and not one good hack, at which he was very indignant. But I was more fortunate when I made a similar observation to a young lady who sat next me at Olympia. We were looking at a class of hacks. The riders in the ring had been painfully trotting for a few seconds, when the order was given to canter, at which they started off merrily with an expression of "Here is something we can do." I said to my neighbor, who had been in this country, "You in England think so little of the trot, and we think so much of it." "Ah," she said, "that is because you have got the trotters; if we had them, we'd think a lot of them too; but it is not our way to think much of things we don't have."

Drawn by Fred Pegram.

Class for saddle-hacks.

Mr. Gooch, the English horseman who so long judged us at Madison Square and who was in the ring at the time, riding Mr. Walter Winans's "Bugle March," a thoroughbred, preached his thoroughbred gospel for some years in New York. He had not much success with it. Still, a good many of our boys and girls, especially those who have a fancy for hunting and would like to be "sporty," were of his way of thinking. Mr. Gooch thought that our saddle-horse was of the harness type. There is no doubt truth in that. Many Kentucky saddle-horses are thick-shouldered and straight-shouldered, although there are many that are not. But when it comes to gaits under the saddle, no animal that I know of is quite equal to the Kentucky hack, especially in the trot. I find plenty horsemen of European birth and bringing up, men from the Continent, Irishmen, and even Englishmen, who will own that no other horse gives you such a "good ride" as a Kentucky saddle-horse. But it would be quite impossible for one of our horses to win at an English show unless he had the accepted English conformation. Hence, no American hack which is not of this kind would be sent there. Mr. Cravath got a second prize and reserve championship this year at Olympia with an American horse, "Doctor Crockett," though he did not appear to me to be going so well as I had see him go in New York. But "Doctor Crockett" is an American thoroughbred, I think from Missouri. The Kentucky saddle-horse "Poetry of Motion" also won at Olympia some years ago, but he is rather thoroughbred in type.

It is a pity that horses taken to Olympia from other parts of the world have to be judged from an English or European point of view, but it is hard to see how it could be otherwise, at any rate if they are shown in the same classes as the English horses. It would be best to have such horses shown in classes by themselves and judged by judges of the country from which they come, as was done in the case of the American trotters at Olympia. But then there should be a pretty large representation of the horses of the country to make it interesting. I should like very much to see a really good and characteristic representation of Kentucky horses at Olympia, say with such horses as "Bourbon King" and "Montgomery Chief," but I presume it would be out of the question to have such an exhibition. The owners would not take the risk of sending animals of such value so far from home. Besides, the stallions which are the most interesting and characteristic Kentucky saddle-horses, could not be sent away at the season of the year in which the London show is held.

As a show of fashionable people and fine clothes the Olympia show is very different from what any one familiar with the Madison Square show in its early days might expect. There is no footway between the ring and the boxes, or no more room than is necessary to permit people to pass to their seats. There is, therefore, none of that staring, or that willingness to be stared at, which was characteristic of the New York show at that time. It was a very frank expression of our democratic society that one saw there in those days—a lot of people in the boxes who had gone in on a rising market, stared at by a lot of people on the floor who had gone in on a falling market. It was not nice. But that feature has long disappeared from our New York show. The London show is, so far as the attendance goes, mainly an afternoon show. There are morning and evening sessions, but these are not so well attended as the afternoon session. The newspapers mentioned a few of the fashionable people present, but there was no description of the dresses. Indeed, there was usually such a large attendance of royal personages that other people were not much noticed. The enumeration of the mere names of the Royalties who came to England to attend the coronation filled a column of the Times. Most of these were probably at the horse show. There was room in the Royal box for not more than nine persons, and on one day there were fifteen of them present, so that the overflow had to be made room for elsewhere. The look of the show was never quite so brilliant as on the occasion of the visit of the King and Queen the afternoon before their coronation. There were twelve thousand people present, who rose to their feet when their Majesties entered, and the national anthem was played.

A "Moke" or coster's donkey.

A very popular evening display was the costers and their carts. They drove in, something like a hundred of them, in their donkey carts, the donkeys braying and in some cases running away, each coster accompanied by his wife or his girl, or "donah," as she is called. They were greeted by a large crowd of spectators with liberal applause and shouts of laughter. It seems that a coster's splendor depends upon the number of pearl buttons he wears on his coat. Among the competitors was the "Pearly King," a celebrated character, whose coat was all buttons. Each 'Arry as he drove in accompanied by his 'Arriet was presented by the member of the House of Lords, who is the presiding genius of the show, with a cigar. I dare say it was the only good one he ever had. In the peer and the coster you saw two of those types with which English life abounds. We have no types, or scarcely any—only individuals. These types have always been of great use to English literature and art, and especially to English pictorial art. I noticed lately a charming example of this use of types in an English comic weekly which made me, on behalf of our American artists, quite envy London this advantage. In this picture the artist had represented a coster out for a day's holiday with his girl. The figure and the tearful expression of the girl were drawn with that pathos and sympathy which are almost inseparable from fine humor—the young man's face and attitude very insolent as he says: "Ketch me a-takin' yer hout fer a 'appy die agin; yer done nothink but grumble hever since I put that snowball down yer back."

I hope there will be no impropriety in alluding to one very English type: the gentleman who presides so well over the destinies of this institution. He is a great credit to that British upper chamber, which now seems to be in such extremities. Of course, he has the business of representation to do, and he does it admirably. But that is a small part of what he has to do. He distributes all the ribbons and prizes. I scarcely think the successful competitors would feel they had won, if he did not. I dare say he is more or less consulted in the judging, work for which is he very competent, as horsemen tell me he is one of the best judges of a horse in England. He is at work all day long. With a sensible and good-humored face, a fine presence, good figure and good height, he is everywhere in evidence and always pleasant to see. He is invariably well turned out (his dress very correct and thorough); in daytime a frock-coat and trousers of some dark color, the waistcoat and scarf always white, which last is, I suppose, a fancy of his own, which his good color permits him to indulge. At night, of course, he is always in equally careful evening dress. And yet, notwithstanding his very correct appearance, he does not mind, when in a hurry, going across the ring at a good trot. He seems to work in this way from nine o'clock in the morning till bedtime, and must be fresh enough in the meantime to have the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany to dinner in the restaurant. Pretty hard work this for a man past fifty to keep up for two weeks. One of his accomplishments, by the way, is that he makes an excellent speech. He is a master of fox-hounds, and is said to be almost as good a man on a yacht as he is in the hunting field.

Special judges were appointed for the fire engines and the mounted police. Drivers of the fire-engines were required to drive their horses between posts and "dolls," as they are called. There were eleven fire-engines drawn by pairs of horses. The winners were a very nice pair of roans. Both the fire-horses and the police-horses were docked. With us, such horses have long tails. The policemen's horses were of all colors and were not uniform in color, as is the case with us. It was interesting to know that the firemen were all sailors, or rather ex-sailors. Sailors can all climb, and London has a great supply to draw from of men bred to the sea, and there can be no better material. I remember a sea captain once saying to a young lady, who had used the term "common sailor." "Madame, there is no such thing as a common sailor; a sailor is an uncommon man." And indeed, when you come to think of it, a man, part of whose daily or nightly routine it may be to hang over a boiling sea at four o'clock in the morning during a hurricane, is in a different class from you and me, whose most serious physical undertaking for the day is holding onto a strap in a trolley as we go to our places of business. There you have indeed that four-o'clock-in-the-morning courage, which Napoleon said was the only kind he respected. Such men, however, seem thrown away in London, where there are but few fires. During the many years I lived there I never but once saw a fire-engine, and that was when I visited Captain Shaw at his head-quarters and was given an exhibition of the men and horses at work. I never saw a fire-engine in the street, and I never saw a fire. We know what frequent sights both are in New York, and what a lot of opportunities our own brave fellows have for the exercise of their splendid qualities.

Perhaps the most spectacular success of the show has been the Russian harness-horses. The troikas were especially popular. These are vehicles something like a Victoria, pulled by three horses driven abreast, the middle horse trotting and the outside horses galloping. The gallopers go with their heads close to the ground and are hence called "snow eaters." They were driven by coachmen padded for protection against Russian winds—padded also, it is said, to make them look well fed. The troikas were usually brought out to show distinguished visitors. They had them out when the King and Queen came. It seemed, however, somewhat odd that there should have been an exhibition of them on the occasion of the visit to the show of the Japanese celebrities, Admiral Togo and General Nogi.

The Russian trotters, or Orloffs, as they are called, are the descendants of a family of native Russian horses, crossed with Arabs. In the latter part of the eighteenth century the Empress Catherine imported half a dozen Arab mares and crossed them with the native horse. The descendants of this cross have been bred in and in until they have acquired certain special characteristics, to which they breed very true. It is said that when you have seen one of them you have seen them all. I can believe this from the uniform character of the Orloffs at Olympia. They have the small head and something of the general conformation of their Arabian ancestors, but they trot, which Arabs rarely do at all well, or at any rate do not do from choice; they are much heavier made than Arabs and they do not carry the high tail, which is an invariable characteristic of the pure-bred Arab. The tails, however, which are beautiful, are very heavy and are allowed to reach almost to the ground. The Orloffs look a good deal like our old-fashioned Morgans. It was claimed in Vermont that Morgans were Arabs. I am now speaking of the Morgans of my young days. They were not confined to Vermont, but were all over the country. It was in the South that I knew them. They were full-made horses, with a great deal of stamina, and endurance, and that is the type of the Russian Orloff. A friend of mine, who knows Orloffs well, tells me that they and the Morgans are very much alike. The pure Orloff breed, as I understand it, has no cross of American trotter. Of course, many American trotters have gone to Russia, and their blood has been mixed with that of the Russian horses. But our trotting blood is not in the pure Orloff strain. The pure Orloffs no doubt are fast trotters. One of them has lately trotted a mile in 2.08. Such speed, however, is very rare among them. For a mile or a half-mile brush, no other horse can compare with the American trotter. The Russian horses at the show were fast trotters, but were easily beaten by the imported Americans. Mr. Winans made up a troika with an American trotter in the middle and an English and a French galloper on each side and easily beat the Orloffs. But though the Orloff cannot contend with the American trotters over short distances, it is claimed that he is much better than the American horse over long distances, and that he has more strength and staying power. He certainly looks very sturdy. An acquaintance of mine, who has had half a dozen of them, tells me that none of them died under twenty-seven and that one lived to thirty. If the Orloff is all he is claimed to be, we should certainly have him in this country, for we need him. Endurance and toughness are not the especial characteristics of the American horses. The American trotter and the Kentucky saddle-horse are two mighty good horses; perhaps, upon the whole, the best in the world, but I doubt if they equal in bone and strength the half-bred horse of England and Ireland, an animal you now find all over Europe.

I had one rather unique opportunity of seeing the Russian troikas. We had a Russian wedding from the boarding-house in which I was staying. As I went abroad chiefly to see the show, I thought I had better find lodgings near by. I found a place just alongside Olympia which answered very well. We had a number of boarders who were connected with the horse show.

Russian Troika trotter and two snow-eaters.

Among them there were a Russian captain of cavalry, who is the head of a riding-school in St. Petersburg, which is supported by the Russian Government, and a young Russian widow, two very good-looking young people, and these two decided upon a wedding. The Russian show horses were drawn up before the door of our boarding-house. The bride, with the gentleman who was to give her away, drove off in a troika drawn by the three big gray Orloffs which had been such a feature of the show. The bridegroom in uniform went in a drosky, to which he walked limping from a fall he had had over a hurdle the day before at the show. The wedding was in the Russian Chapel in Welbeck Street, the same I used to attend, in a dress-coat and a white tie at ten o'clock in the morning, on the frequent occasions upon which a Te Deum was celebrated after the Czar's escape from attempted assassination.

Among the horsemen in our boarding-house was a young Englishman, who had brought over two Irish horses to the show, very fine horses indeed. He bought them in Ireland and had trained them in Berlin. "Made in Germany," he said, and it was probably the one joke of the serious young fellow. I need scarcely say that in a horseman's phrase "to make" means to train or handle. He has ridden in horse shows all his life. I think I remember him, as a little fellow of eight or ten riding jumping ponies in the dreary old Agricultural Hall at Islington. I remember him shedding some tears once after his pony had several times refused a hurdle with a water-jump on the other side, a jump that might well have frightened such a child. But with a little coaxing he went at it again and cleared the fence, landing in the water. Since then he has done nothing but break and train horses. He is a square-featured, solid, sensible young fellow, blonde in color, with that look of health which is the result of a life spent in the open air and in the saddle. His opinions are expressed with modesty and moderation, qualities usual in really good horsemen, or indeed in those who are masters in any sort or calling, when they speak upon their own subjects. I could rarely get more out of him than, "perhaps," or "Do you think so?" I was holding forth upon a favorite theme of mine, that you rarely see a really good hack in Europe, and instanced one of his horses "made in Germany," with which I had seen him take a second prize at the show. "Surely," I said, "you can't call that a good trot. I don't mind his going with a perfectly straight front leg; you often have that in thoroughbreds or in horses bred on thoroughbred lines, and the action is sometimes pleasant to sit; but your horse trots so 'big' and sometimes does something very like pitching." ("Pitching," I should say, is more likely to appear in harness-horses and is a kind of hopping, to which the slower horse of a pair will sometimes resort, in order to keep pace with a mate that is too fast for him.) The young man's only reply was—"Well, I call him a good hack," in which I am sure he was quite mistaken. I noticed that this horse had a band, or strap, around his neck. The judges seemed to be shy of riding him. His mane was hogged, and I had heard that a strap is sometimes put round the neck of an excitable horse that has no mane, in order to give a rider something to hold on to, in case such aid is needed. But he told me it was the sealed band which the German customs authorities put round the necks of exported horses which are to be brought back to Germany, and without which they cannot be readmitted without payment of the heavy duty. The band will not come off over the horse's head and cannot be removed except by breaking the seal.

I found that what had been told me before sailing about the prevalence of hogging, or cutting the mane entirely off, in England was true. If you ask European importers of saddle-horses into this country why they bring us horses with hogged manes, they will tell you that it is impossible to get them any other way. Of course, they cannot keep a horse the six months which it will take to have his mane lie over before selling him. While the mane is growing, it is very unsightly, so that a dealer, who would sell his horse, must keep it close cropped. The practice of hogging is not quite so general in England as I had supposed, but is nevertheless very common. They not only hog the manes of ponies but of horses sixteen hands high, and long-tailed horses as well as docked horses and cobs. Indeed, a breedy animal with a long tail is supposed to look particularly well with a hogged mane. One argument offered in defence of the practice is that grooms cannot be got to take proper care of horses' manes, which seems to me a poor reason. The real reason, no doubt, is that it is the fashion and is believed to look smart. It may look smart, but I am sure it is not beautiful. It is true that horsemen like to look at a horse from the near side, the mane of course falling over on the off side, and it is true that the line of the neck has a clean look when seen from that side. It might be thought, therefore, that by cutting off the mane entirely, you would get the same clean look on both sides. But the line of the mane seen from the near side, when it is allowed to grow and fall over on the off side, is much softer than the line of hogged mane. Another objection to the practice comes from almost the best saddle-horse man in America, who tells me that he thinks that a hogged mane gives a horse a stupid look and makes him look like a mule. I am not so sure about the stupid look, although I think there is something in that. But I am sure it does make him look like a mule, and the impression is further assisted by the practice of cutting the hair from the tail, leaving only a little tuft at the end. If you see a horse standing in a stall, with that tail turned toward you and no mane, you will have to look a second time, especially if he has coarse ears, to assure yourself that he is not a mule.

Would rather not.

Of all the foolish meddling with horses' manes and tails, the hogging of the mane seems to be the most foolish. Docking is a damage to the horse, as it deprives him of his means of defence against flies. Hogging of the mane injures the horse in the same way. But it may also be a serious danger to the rider. When men have ceased to be young, have no longer the grip with the knees they once had, or the skill in balancing and quickness in throwing themselves with the horse when he shies, or if, through stoutness, the centre of gravity of the body is higher up, a mane to take hold of, in the case of rearing or bucking or bad shying, is very desirable. I should not like to put an elderly man on a horse with a hogged mane. The mane besides is of great use in mounting. I speak with some feeling on this subject. I was near coming to grief not long ago in trying to mount a broncho with a hogged mane. Just as I was mounting he jumped forward, with the result that I landed astride him behind the saddle, very near his tail in fact. He bucked violently and threw me up and caught me as I came down and threw me up again and then consented to deposit me on the ground. I was not hurt, as it happened, but I might well have been. An elderly man should not take such chances. Of course if the horse had had his mane, I should have been able to get into the saddle. A tuft of hair is sometimes left on the neck, so that the rider may have something to hold on to. This is, however, usually too low down to be of much use and is ugly besides.

At Olympia most of the hacks and hunters and many of the officers' chargers had their manes off. In the case of the chargers, I wonder that it is permitted. A mane must be of use when the rider has to mount quickly, or when he has been wounded. Besides, in the case of an actual charge, a horse may not be under such good control as he is at a horse show, where the rider is able to make a horse stand quietly, while he imitates with a cane the play of a sword about his head. In our training camps at the time of the Spanish War, our young cavalrymen, who were in the making, found the manes very useful. The cavorting animals would be spilling from their backs the boys, who were as green as the horses, while their jeering comrades shouted the advice: —"Remember the Maine."

The indications are that docking is going out of fashion. Hackneys, of course, are still docked, but most of the coach horses and of the hacks and hunters have long tails. Long tails now seem rather smarter than short tails. Most of the cavalry horses at the show had long tails, which indeed has always been the rule. But with regard to the other riding horses also, it was admitted on all sides that the long tails were much more beautiful. But then the horses at the show were all fine and there never has been any doubt that a fine horse, especially a fine horse of thoroughbred conformation, looks better with his tail on. In the case of a plain horse it is less evident. Docking is a great leveller; if it makes a fine horse less beautiful, it seems to make a plain horse look more like other horses.

I hope the reader will indulge me in a suggestion I have to make upon the philosophy of this practice. I find that horses are docked in times of reaction and repression, of criticism and disappointment. It was unknown among the ancients. It is quite inconceivable that the Greeks and Romans, with their clear common-sense and their true feeling for beauty should have tolerated such practice. It seems to have originated in the middle ages. With the Renaissance and the revival of learning it disappeared. At any rate, we see nothing of it in England during the great Elizabethan period nor during the Puritan times that followed. It reappears during the long English reaction, which came after the Restoration. That was a period of levity in thought and of authority and a narrow precision in expression. The treatment of the tails of the horses then in vogue —never more severe than in Queen Anne's time—had a certain relation to the rigidity of the verse of Pope. It is conceivable, at a time when poets lose their liberty, that horses should lose their tails. With the philosophers of the eighteenth century, however, and the large expectations regarding human happiness and perfectability that characterized the later days of that century, the tails of the horses were again allowed to grow. But with the failure of these expectations, due to the excesses of the French Revolution, with the sanguinary episode of the career of Napoleon, and with the advent of the Holy Alliance, that triumph of > old Custom, legal Crime

> And bloody Faith, the foulest birth of Time, the horses again lost their tails. The maimed animal of that day, or, at any rate, some specimens of him, remained as late as the early fifties, and this was the "bob-tailed horse" of our infancy, that is, of the infancy of men of my age. With the repeal of the Corn Laws in England, however, the revolutionary movements on the Continent, the anti-slavery agitation in this country, and that spirit of cheerfulness and hopefulness which prevailed during the fifties, the tails of the horses again became long. But those great exhibitions of force which came later, our Civil War, the Franco-German and the Russo-Turkish Wars, brought about a more practical and sceptical disposition of men's minds, which in the early eighties had that influence we might expect upon the tails of the horses. It is this last long reign of the fashion of docking, which is now, I trust, drawing to a close. It may be that the recent socialistic movements, the career of Mr. Lloyd George and the agitations of the suffragettes may have had something to do with this result.

Judge Moore's victory in the sixteen-mile Marathon race, not open to dealers, was especially interesting. A horse show competition is necessarily a competition in action and in beauty and, to some extent, also in speed, but it cannot afford a test of strength and endurance. The Marathon race was such a test. It was won by Judge Moore with American trotting-bred horses. The horses of the other coaches were hackneys, and the fact that they arrived in pretty good shape after the race would seem to indicate that they do not altogether deserve the accusation so often made against them, that they are show horses and nothing else.

I took a special interest in seeing some of the original classes, from which were culled the horses that were permitted to compete, and I had a strong desire to see more of some of those that got the gate. There are many good horses that cannot win in the show-ring. It is likely that many of the best horses cannot. Very few of the celebrated horses of the past would have any chance there. If any of the famous horses of history and romance, Alexander's "Bucephalus," Cæsar's horse, with a divided hoof, that he rode in Gaul, William III's "Old Sorrel," General Lee's "Traveller," bred in my own country, Dugald Dalgety's "Gustavus Vasa," that favorite of my childhood, "Selim," in Weems's "Life of Marion," the smart pony in "Sanford and Merton" that ran away with Tommy and seemed in the picture to be going pretty fast, though his action did not conform to the shabby revelations of modern instantaneous photographers, and that Roman-nosed horse, upon which, in my red-bound copy of the "Arabian Nights," Aladdin rode to his wedding with the Princess (how I puzzled over his selection of a Roman-nosed horse, when he might, by rubbing a lamp, have had any horse he chose), if these animals, I say, should appear at any modern horse show, they would, one and all, "get the gate" for a lot of impossible screws. And yet they were good horses.

At several little suburban shows I saw the horses I had previously seen at Olympia. The day before the Orloffs were sent back to Russia, there was a trial and an award of prizes for them at Ranelagh, which I went to see. Ranelagh is a little, or rather a pretty large park, entirely surrounded by London, and yet the grounds are so well laid out and the trees and lawns arranged with such art that you might suppose yourself to be a hundred miles away in the country. There are some pretty club-houses scattered throughout the grounds. Before one of these many gayly dressed ladies and smart-looking men sat on chairs on the lawn and watched the horses paraded before them. The course was not a track, such as we should see at one of our county fairs, fenced in and with a road-bed of dirt or gravel. There was not even a rope to divide the company from the horses, and the track was the lawn. It was the loveliest of June afternoons. I think there is a charm in the essentially ephemeral character of such weather in England. The landscape lay as if in a trance. The low-lying, thick, white clouds, between which there were great spaces of pale blue sky, the dreaming trees, some elms and oaks, especially one vast oak, pushing out straight from its stem a green and mighty arm, were so delicately passive. It could not be that anything so lovely should last. The face of nature seemed to say: "I cannot hold these masses of white cloud always suspended in mid-air and the trees always motionless. So enjoy it to the utmost while you may. But I shall have other scenes of beauty and interest for you. Here in this happy land do I spread my verdant lawns, my sylvan glades, for the children of sport and pleasure." How well was this promise redeemed during the later hours of that afternoon. There was a race between three troikas, blacks, chestnuts, and grays, each team with three horses abreast. The race was over a circular course, nearly a mile long, across the lawns and among the trees. As the galloping horses vanished and reappeared now and again, among the trees, you thought you were seeing some painter's vision of the ancient world rather than a show of modern horses. There was one little vista, or path, to the left, into which the teams emerged on the home-stretch. As the horses came leaping into this glade from the midst of the trees, they made a charming appearance, especially the grays, perhaps from contrast with the dark green English foliage. The scene was very pretty and classic.

I went to yet another little horse show at Ranelagh, where I saw in brief the true nature of the issue between horses and machines. There were some hundreds of motors all about, in which the people had come to see the horses. While we sat on the lawn, looking at an exhibition of ladies' saddle-horses, there was a whirring sound overhead and an aeroplane passed above us. The expression of the people was unmistakable:—"There's that tiresome man again; why cannot we be allowed to sit quietly and see these beautiful horses?"

THE VALLEY OF ROCKS

By Gertrude Huntington McGiffert

HEADLANDS and hills and a world of rocks—
How cares bleach out in the golden weather!
The friendly goat, the breezes and I
    Clambering up the crags together.

Inland below the "Witches' cave,"
The "Devil's Cheese Ring" across the valley,
Where the white road coils like a silver snake,
    And lazy shadows flit and dally.

Sheer seaward the tide-hounds harry and race,
Salt echoes tingle the mountain passes,
And self like a husk blows forgotten away,
    The soul roams naked among the grasses.

And the only sin is to hold aloof—
Hearts should unfold in the shining weather—
And the only prayer is that God may know
    How we feel His heart beat in the heather.

Lynton, Devon, England.

ETHAN FROME

BY EDITH WHARTON

VIII

HEN Ethan was called back to the farm from Worcester his mother gave him, for his own use, a small room behind the untenanted "best parlour." Here he had nailed up shelves for his books, built himself a box-sofa out of boards and a mattress, laid out his papers on a kitchen-table, hung over it, on the bare wall, an engraving of Abraham Lincoln and a calendar with "Thoughts from the Poets," and tried, with these meagre materials, to produce some likeness to the study of a "minister" who had been kind to him and lent him books when he was at Worcester. He still took refuge there in summer, but when Mattie came to live with them he had had to give her his stove, and consequently the room was uninhabitable for several months of the year.

To this retreat he descended as soon as the house had grown quiet, and Zeena's steady breathing from the bed had assured him that there was to be no sequel to the scene in the kitchen. After Zeena's departure he and Mattie had stood speechless, neither seeking to approach the other. Then the girl had resumed her task of clearing up the kitchen for the night and he had taken his lantern and gone on his usual round outside the house. The kitchen was empty when he came back to it; but his tobacco-pouch and pipe had been laid on the table, and under them was a scrap of paper torn from the back of a seedsman's catalogue, on which three words were written: "Don't trouble, Ethan."

Going into his cold dark "study" he placed the lantern on the table and, stooping to its light, read the message again and again. It was the first time that Mattie had ever written to him, and the possession of the paper gave him a strange new sense of her nearness; yet it deepened his anguish by reminding him that henceforth they would have no other way of communicating with each other. For the life of her smile, the warmth of her voice, only cold paper and dead words!

Confused impulses of rebellion stormed in him. He was too young, too strong, too full of the sap of living, to submit so easily to the destruction of his hopes. Must he wear out all his years at the side of a bitter querulous woman? Other possibilities had been in him, possibilities sacrificed, one by one, to Zeena's narrow-mindedness and ignorance. And what good had come of it? She was a hundred times bitterer and more discontented than when he had married her: the one pleasure left her was to inflict pain on him. All the healthy instincts of self-defence rose up in him against such waste . . .

He bundled himself into his old coonskin coat and lay down on the box-sofa to think. Under his cheek he felt a hard object with strange protuberances. It was a cushion which Zeena had made for him when they were engaged—the only piece of needlework he had ever seen her do. He flung it across the floor and propped his head against the wall . . .

He knew a case of a man over the mountain—a young fellow of about his own age—who had escaped from just such a life of misery by going West with the girl he cared for. His wife had divorced him, and he had married the girl and prospered. Ethan had seen the couple the summer before at Shadd's Falls, where they had come to visit relatives. They had a little girl with fair curls, who wore a gold locket and was dressed like a princess. The deserted wife had not done badly either. Her husband had given her the farm and she had managed to sell it, and with that and the alimony she had started a lunch-room at Bettsbridge and bloomed into activity and importance. Ethan was fired by the thought. Why should he not leave with Mattie the next day, instead of letting her go alone? He would hide his valise under the seat of the sleigh, and Zeena would suspect nothing till she went upstairs for her nap and found a letter on the bed . . .

His impulses were still near the surface, and he sprang up, re-lit the lantern, and sat down at the table. He rummaged in the drawer for a sheet of paper, found one, and began to write.

"Zeena, I've done all I could for you, and I don't see as it's been any use. I don't blame you, nor I don't blame myself. Maybe both of us will do better separate. I'm going to try my luck West, and you can sell the farm and mill, and keep the money——"

His pen paused on the word, which brought home to him the relentless conditions of his lot. If he gave the farm and mill to Zeena, what would be left him to start his own life with? Once in the West he was sure of picking up work—he would not have feared to try his chance alone. But with Mattie depending on him the case was different. And what of Zeena's fate? Farm and mill were mortgaged to the limit of their value, and even if she found a purchaser—in itself an unlikely chance—it was doubtful if she could clear a thousand dollars on the sale. Meanwhile, how could she keep the farm going? It was only by incessant labour and personal supervision that Ethan drew a meagre living from his land, and his wife, even if she were in better health than she imagined, could never carry such a burden alone.

Well, she could go back to her people, then, and see what they would do for her. It was the fate she was forcing on Mattie—why not let her try it herself? By the time she had found out his whereabouts, and brought suit for divorce, he would probably —wherever he was—be earning enough to pay her a sufficient alimony. And the alternative was to let Mattie go forth alone, with far less hope of ultimate provision . . .

He had scattered the contents of the table-drawer in his search for a sheet of paper, and as he took up his pen his eye fell on an old copy of the Bettsbridge Eagle. The advertising sheet was folded uppermost, and he read the seductive words: "Trips to the West: Reduced Rates."

He drew the lantern nearer and eagerly scanned the fares; then the paper fell from his hand and he pushed aside his unfinished letter. A moment ago he had wondered what he and Mattie were to live on when they reached the West; now he saw that he had not even the money to take her there. Borrowing was out of the question: six months before he had given his only security to raise funds for necessary repairs to the mill, and he knew that without security no one at Starkfield would lend him ten dollars. The inexorable facts closed in on him like prison-warders hand-cuffing a convict. There was no way out—none. He was a prisoner for life, and now his one ray of light was to be extinguished.

He crept back wearily to the sofa, stretching himself out with limbs so heavy that he felt as if they would never move again. Tears rose in his throat and slowly burned their way to his lids.

As he lay there, the window-pane that faced him grew gradually lighter, inlaying upon the darkness a square of moon-suffused sky. A crooked tree-branch crossed it, a branch of the apple-tree under which, on summer evenings, he had sometimes found Mattie sitting when he came up from the mill. Slowly the rim of the rainy vapours caught fire and burnt away, and a pure moon swung into the blue. Ethan, rising on his elbow, watched the landscape whiten and shape itself under the sculpture of the moon. This was the night on which he was to have taken Mattie coasting, and there hung the lamp to light them! He looked out at the slopes bathed in lustre, the silver-edged darkness of the woods, the spectral purple of the hills against the sky, and it seemed as though all the beauty of the night had been poured out to mock his wretchedness . . .

He fell asleep, and when he woke the chill of the winter dawn was in the room. He felt cold and stiff and hungry, and ashamed of being hungry. He rubbed his eyes and went to the window. A red sun stood above the gray rim of the fields, behind trees that looked black and brittle. He said to himself: "This is Matt's last day," and tried to think what the place would be without her.

As he stood there he heard a step behind him and she entered.

"Oh, Ethan—were you here all night?"

She looked so small and pinched, in her poor dress, with the red scarf wound about her, and the cold light turning her paleness sallow, that Ethan stood before her without speaking.

"You must be frozen," she went on, fixing lustreless eyes on him.

He drew a step nearer. "How did you know I was here?"

"Because I heard you go down stairs again after I went to bed, and I listened all night, and you didn't come up."

All his tenderness rushed to his lips. He looked at her and said: "I'll come right along and make up the kitchen fire."

They went back to the kitchen, and he fetched the coal and kindlings and cleared out the stove for her, while she brought in the milk and the cold remains of the meat-pie. When warmth began to radiate from the stove, and the first ray of sunlight lay on the kitchen floor, Ethan's dark thoughts melted in the mellower air. The sight of Mattie going about her work as he had seen her on so many mornings made it seem impossible that she should ever cease to be a part of the scene. He said to himself that he had doubtless exaggerated the significance of Zeena's threats, and that she too, with the return of daylight, would come to a saner mood.

He went up to Mattie as she bent above the stove, and laid his hand on her arm. "I don't want you should trouble either," he said, looking into her eyes with a smile.

She flushed up warmly and whispered back: "No, Ethan, I ain't going to trouble."

"I guess things'll straighten out," he added.

There was no answer but a quick throb of her lids, and he went on: "She ain't said anything this morning?"

"No. I haven't seen her yet."

"Don't you take any notice when you do."

With this injunction he left her and went out to the cow-barn. He saw Jotham Powell walking up the hill through the morning mist, and the familiar sight added to his growing conviction of security.

As the two men were clearing out the stalls Jotham rested on his pitch-fork to say: "Dan'l Byrne's goin' over to the Flats to-day noon, an' he c'd take Mattie's trunk along, and make it easier ridin' when I take her over in the sleigh."

Ethan looked at him blankly, and he continued: "Mis' Frome said the new girl'd be at the Flats at five, and I was to take Mattie then, so's 't she could ketch the six o'clock train for Stamford."

Ethan felt the blood drumming in his temples. He had to wait a moment before he could find voice to say: "Oh, it ain't so sure about Mattie's going——"

"That so?" said Jotham indifferently; and they went on with their work.

When they returned to the kitchen the two women were already at breakfast. Zeena had an air of unusual alertness and activity. She drank two cups of coffee and fed the cat with the scraps left in the pie-dish; then she rose from her seat and, walking over to the window, snipped two or three yellow leaves from the geraniums. "Aunt Martha's ain't got a faded leaf on 'em; but they pine away when they ain't cared for," she said reflectively. Then she turned to Jotham and asked: "What time'd you say Dan'l Byrne'd be along?"

The hired man threw a hesitating glance at Ethan. "Round about noon," he said.

Zeena turned to Mattie. "That trunk of yours is too heavy for the sleigh, and Dan'l Byrne'll be round to take it over to the Flats," she said.

"I'm much obliged to you, Zeena," said Mattie.

"I'd like to go over things with you first," Zeena continued in an unperturbed voice. "I know there's a huckabuck towel missing; and I can't make out what you done with that match-safe 't used to stand behind the stuffed owl in the parlor."

She went out, followed by Mattie, and when the men were alone Jotham said to his employer: "I guess I better let Dan'l come round, then."

Ethan finished his usual morning tasks about the house and barn; then he said to Jotham: "I'm going down to Starkfield. Tell them not to wait dinner."

The passion of rebellion had broken out in him again. That which had seemed incredible in the sober light of day had really come to pass, and he was to assist as a helpless spectator at Mattie's banishment. His manhood was humbled by the part he was compelled to play and by the thought of what Mattie must think of him. Confused impulses struggled in him as he strode along to the village. He had made up his mind to do something, but he did not know what it would be.

The early mist had vanished and the fields lay like a silver shield under the sun.

It was one of the days when the glitter of winter shines through a pale haze of spring. Every yard of the road was alive with Mattie's presence, and there was hardly a branch against the sky or a tangle of brambles on the bank in which some bright shred of memory was not caught. Once, in the stillness, the call of a bird in a mountain ash was so like her laughter that his heart tightened and then grew large; and all these things made him see that something must be done at once.

Suddenly it occurred to him that Andrew Hale, who was a kind-hearted man, might be induced to reconsider his refusal and advance a small sum on the lumber, if he were told that Zeena's ill-health made it necessary to hire a servant. Hale, after all, knew enough of Ethan's situation to make it possible for the latter to renew his appeal without too much loss of pride; and, moreover, how much did pride count in the ebullition of passions in his breast?

The more he considered his plan the more hopeful it seemed. If he could get Mrs. Hale's ear he felt certain of success, and with fifty dollars in his pocket nothing could keep him from Mattie . . .

His first object was to reach Starkfield before Hale had started for his work; he knew the carpenter had a job down the Corbury road and was likely to leave his house early. Ethan's long strides grew more rapid with the accelerated beat of his thoughts, and as he reached the foot of School House Hill he caught sight of Hale's sleigh in the distance. He hurried forward to meet it, but as it drew nearer he saw that it was driven by the carpenter's youngest boy and that the figure at his side, looking like a large upright cocoon in spectacles, was that of Mrs. Hale. Ethan signed to them to stop, and Mrs. Hale leaned forward, her pink wrinkles twinkling with benevolence.

"Mr. Hale? Why, yes, you'll find him down home now. He ain't going to his work this forenoon. He woke up with a touch o' lumbago, and I just made him put on one of old Dr. Kidder's plasters and set right up into the fire."

Beaming maternally on Ethan, she bent over to add: "I on'y just heard from Mr. Hale 'bout Zeena's going over to Bettsbridge to see that new doctor. I'm real sorry she's feeling so bad again! I hope he thinks he can do something for her? I don't know anybody round here's had more sickness than Zeena. I always tell Mr. Hale I don't know what she'd 'a' done if she hadn't 'a' had you to look after her; and I used to say the same thing 'bout your mother. You've had an awful mean time, Ethan Frome."

She gave him a last nod of sympathy while her son chirped to the horse; and Ethan, as she drove off, stood in the middle of the road and stared after the retreating sleigh.

It was a long time since any one had spoken to him as kindly as Mrs. Hale. Most people were either indifferent to his troubles, or disposed to think it natural that a young fellow of his age should have carried without repining the burden of three crippled lives. But Mrs. Hale had said "You've had an awful mean time, Ethan Frome," and he felt less alone with his misery. If the Hales were sorry for him they would surely respond to his appeal . . .

He started down the road toward their house, but at the end of a few yards he pulled up sharply, the blood in his face. For the first time, in the light of the words he had just heard, he saw what he was about to do. He was planning to take advantage of the Hales' sympathy to obtain money from them on false pretences. That was a plain statement of the cloudy purpose which had driven him in headlong to Starkfield.

With the sudden perception of the point to which his madness had carried him, the madness fell and he saw his life before him as it was. He was a poor man, the husband of a sickly woman, whom his desertion would leave alone and destitute; and even if he had had the heart to desert her he could have done so only by deceiving two kindly people who had pitied him.

He turned and walked slowly back to the farm.

IX

At the kitchen door Daniel Byrne sat in his sleigh behind a big-boned gray who pawed the snow and swung his long head restlessly from side to side.

Ethan went into the kitchen and found his wife by the stove. Her head was wrapped in her shawl, and she was reading a book called "Kidney Troubles and Their Cure" on which he had had to pay extra postage only a few days before.

Zeena did not move or look up when he entered, and after a moment he asked: "Where's Mattie?"

Without lifting her eyes from the page she replied: "I presume she's getting down her trunk."

The blood rushed to his face. "Getting down her trunk—alone?"

"Jotham Powell's down in the woodlot, and Dan'l Byrne says he darsn't leave that horse," she returned.

Her husband, without stopping to hear the end of the phrase, had left the kitchen and sprung up the stairs. The door of Mattie's room was shut, and he wavered a moment on the landing. "Matt," he said in a low voice; but there was no answer, and he put his hand on the door-knob.

He had never been in Mattie's room except once, in the early summer, when he had gone there to plaster up a leak in the eaves, but he remembered exactly how everything had looked: the red and white quilt on her narrow bed, the pretty pin-cushion on the chest of drawers, and over it the enlarged photograph of her mother, in an oxydized frame, with a bunch of dyed grasses at the back. Now these and all other tokens of her presence had vanished, and the room looked as bare and comfortless as when Zeena had shown her into it on the day of her arrival. In the middle of the floor stood her trunk, and on the trunk she sat in her Sunday dress, her back turned to the door and her face in her hands. She had not heard Ethan's call because she was sobbing; and she did not hear his step till he stood close behind her and laid his hands on her shoulders.

"Matt—oh, don't—oh, Matt!"

She started up, lifting her wet face to his. "Ethan—I thought I wasn't ever going to see you again!"

He took her in his arms, pressing her close, and with a trembling hand smoothed away the hair from her forehead.

"Not see me again? What do you mean?"

She sobbed out: "Jotham said you told him we wasn't to wait dinner for you, and I thought——"

"You thought I meant to cut it?" he finished for her grimly.

She clung to him without answering, and he laid his lips on her hair, which was soft and yet springy, like certain mosses on warm slopes, with the faint woody scent of fresh sawdust in the sun.

Through the door they heard Zeena's voice calling out from below: "Dan'l Byrne says you better hurry up if you want him to take that trunk."

They drew apart with stricken faces. Words of resistance rushed to Ethan's lips and died there. Mattie found her handkerchief and dried her eyes; then, bending down, she took hold of a handle of the trunk.

Ethan put her aside. "You let go, Matt," he ordered her.

She answered: "It takes two to coax it round the corner;" and submitting to this argument he grasped the other handle, and together they manœuvred the heavy trunk out to the landing.

"Now let go," he repeated; then he shouldered the trunk and carried it down the stairs and across the passage to the kitchen. Zeena, who had gone back to her seat by the stove, did not lift her head from her book as he passed. Mattie followed him out of the door and helped him to lift the trunk into the back of the sleigh. When it was in place they stood side by side on the door-step, watching Daniel Byrne plunge off behind his fidgety horse.

It seemed to Ethan that his heart was bound with cords which an unseen hand was tightening with every tick of the clock. Twice he opened his lips to speak to Mattie and found no breath. At length, as she turned to re-enter the house, he laid a detaining hand on her.

"I'm going to drive you over, Matt," he whispered.

She murmured back: "I think Zeena wants I should go with Jotham."

"I'm going to drive you over," he repeated; and she went into the kitchen without answering.

At dinner Ethan could not eat. If he lifted his eyes they rested on Zeena's pinched face, and the corners of her straight lips seemed to quiver away into a smile. She ate well, declaring that the mild weather made her feel better, and pressed a second helping of beans on Jotham Powell, whose wants she generally ignored.

Mattie, when the meal was over, went about her usual task of clearing the table and washing up the dishes. Zeena, after feeding the cat, had returned to her rocking-chair by the stove, and Jotham Powell, who always lingered last, reluctantly pushed back his chair and moved toward the door.

On the threshold he turned back to say to Ethan: "What time'll I come round for Mattie?"

Ethan was standing near the window, mechanically filling his pipe while he watched Mattie move to and fro. He answered: "You needn't come round; I'm going to drive her over myself."

He saw the rise of the colour in Mattie's averted cheek, and the quick lifting of Zeena's head.

"I want you should stay here this afternoon, Ethan," his wife said. "Jotham can drive Mattie over."

Mattie flung an imploring glance at him, but he repeated curtly: "I'm going to drive her over myself."

Zeena continued in the same even tone: "I wanted you should stay and fix up that stove in Mattie's room afore the girl gets here. It ain't been drawing right for nigh on a month now."

Ethan's voice rose indignantly. "If it was good enough for Mattie I guess it's good enough for a hired girl."

"That girl that's coming told me she was used to a house where they had a furnace," Zeena persisted with the same monotonous mildness.

"She'd better ha' stayed there then," he flung back at her; and turning to Mattie he added in a hard voice: "You be ready by three, Matt; I've got business at Corbury."

Jotham Powell had started for the barn, and Ethan strode down after him aflame with anger. The pulses in his temples throbbed and a fog was in his eyes. He went about his task without knowing what force directed him, or whose hands and feet were fulfilling its orders. It was not till he led out the sorrel and backed him between the shafts of the sleigh that he once more became conscious of what he was doing. As he passed the bridle over the horse's head, and wound the traces around the shafts, he remembered the day when he had made the same preparations in order to drive over and meet his wife's cousin at the Flats. It was little more than a year ago, on just such a soft afternoon, with a "feel" of spring in the air. The sorrel, turning the same big ringed eye on him, nuzzled the palm of his hand in the same way; and one by one all the days between rose up and stood before him . . .

He flung the bearskin into the sleigh, climbed to the seat, and drove up to the house. When he entered the kitchen it was empty, but Mattie's bag and shawl lay ready by the door. He went to the foot of the stairs and listened. No sound reached him from above, but presently he thought he heard some one moving about in his deserted study, and pushing open the door he saw Mattie, in her hat and jacket, standing with her back to him near the table.

She started at his approach and turning quickly, said: "Is it time?"

"What are you doing here, Matt?" he asked her.

She looked at him timidly. "I was just taking a look round—that's all," she answered, with a wavering smile.

They went back into the kitchen without speaking, and Ethan picked up her bag and shawl.

"Where's Zeena?" he asked.

"She went upstairs right after dinner. She said she had those shooting pains again, and didn't want to be disturbed."

"Didn't she say goodbye to you?"

"No. That was all she said."

Ethan, looking slowly about the kitchen, said to himself with a shudder that in a few hours he would be returning to it alone. Then the sense of unreality overcame him once more, and he could not bring himself to believe that Mattie stood there for the last time before him.

"Come on," he said almost gaily, opening the door and putting her bag into the sleigh. He sprang to his seat and bent over to tuck the rug about her as she slipped into the place at his side. "Now then, go 'long," he said, with a shake of the reins that sent the sorrel placidly jogging down the hill.

"We got lots of time for a good ride, Matt!" he cried, seeking her hand beneath the fur and pressing it in his. His face tingled and he felt dizzy, as if he had stopped in at the Starkfield saloon on a zero day for a drink.

At the gate, instead of making for Starkfield, he turned the sorrel to the right, up the Bettsbridge road. Mattie sat silent, giving no sign of surprise; but after a moment she said: "Are you going round by Shadow Pond?"

He laughed and answered: "I knew you'd know!"

She drew closer under the bearskin, so that, looking sideways around his coat-sleeve, he could just catch the tip of her nose and a blown brown wave of hair. They drove slowly up the road between fields glistening under the pale sun, and then bent to the right down a lane edged with spruce and larch. Ahead of them, a long way off, a range of hills stained by patches of black forest flowed away in round white curves against the sky. The lane passed into a pine-wood with boles reddening in the afternoon sun and delicate blue shadows on the snow. As they entered it the breeze fell and a warm stillness seemed to drop from the branches with the dropping needles. Here the snow was so pure that the tiny tracks of wood-animals had left on it intricate lace-like patterns, and the bluish cones caught in its surface stood out like ornaments of bronze.

Ethan drove on in silence till they reached a part of the wood where the pines were more widely spaced; then he drew up and helped Mattie to get out of the sleigh. They passed between the aromatic trunks, the snow breaking crisply under their feet, till they came to a sheet of water with steep wooded sides. Across its frozen surface, from the farther bank, a single hill rising against the western sun threw the long, conical shadow which gave the lake its name. It was a shy secret spot, full of the same dumb melancholy that Ethan felt in his heart.

He looked up and down the little pebbly beach till his eye lit on a fallen tree-trunk half submerged in snow.

"There's where we sat at the picnic," he reminded her.

The entertainment of which he spoke was one of the few that they had taken part in together: a "church picnic" which, on a long afternoon of the preceding summer, had filled the retired place with merry-making. Mattie had begged him to go with her but he had refused. Then, toward sunset, coming down from the mountain where he had been felling timber, he had been caught by some strayed revellers and drawn into the group by the lake, where Mattie, encircled by facetious youths, and bright as a blackberry under her spreading hat, was brewing coffee over a gipsy fire. He remembered the shyness he had felt at approaching her in his uncouth clothes, and then the lighting up of her face, and the way she had broken through the group to come to him with a cup in her hand. They had sat for a few minutes on the fallen log by the pond, and she had missed her gold locket, and set the young men searching for it; and it was Ethan who had spied it in the moss . . . That was all; but all their intercourse had been made up of just such inarticulate flashes, when they seemed to come suddenly upon happiness as if they had surprised a butterfly in the winter woods . . .

"It was right there I found your locket," he said, pushing his foot into a dense tuft of blueberry bushes.

"I never saw anybody with such sharp eyes!" she answered.

She sat down on the tree-trunk in the sun and he sat down beside her.

"You were as pretty as a picture in that pink hat," he said.

She laughed with pleasure. "Oh, I guess it was the hat!" she rejoined.

They had never before avowed their inclination so openly, and Ethan, for a moment, had the illusion that he was a free man, wooing the girl he meant to marry. He looked at her hair and longed to touch it again, and to tell her that it smelt of the woods; but he never had learned to say such things.

Suddenly she rose to her feet and said: "We mustn't stay here any longer."

He continued to gaze at her vaguely, only half-roused from his dream. "There's plenty of time," he answered.

They stood looking at each other as if the eyes of each were straining to absorb and hold fast the other's image. There were things he had to say to her before they parted, but he could not say them in that place of summer memories, and he turned and followed her in silence to the sleigh. As they drove away the sun sank behind the hill and the pine-boles turned from red to gray.

By a devious track between the fields they wound back to the Starkfield road. Under the open sky the light was still clear, with a reflection of cold red on the eastern hills. The clumps of trees in the snow seemed to draw together in ruffled lumps, like birds with their heads under their wings; and the sky, as it paled, rose higher, leaving the earth more alone.

As they turned into the Starkfield road Ethan said: "Matt, what do you mean to do?"

She did not answer at once, but at length she said: "I'll try to get a place in a store."

"You know you can't do it. The bad air and the standing all day nearly killed you before."

"I'm a lot stronger than I was before I came to Starkfield."

"And now you're going to throw away all the good it's done you!"

There seemed to be no answer to this, and again they drove on for a while without speaking. With every yard of the way some spot where they had stood, and laughed together or been silent, clutched at Ethan and dragged him back.

"Isn't there any of your father's folks could help you?"

"There isn't any of 'em I'd ask."

He lowered his voice to say: "You know there's nothing I wouldn't do for you if I could."

"I know there isn't."

"But I can't——"

She was silent, but he felt a slight tremor in the shoulder against his.

"Oh, Matt," he broke out, "if I could ha' gone with you now I'd ha' done it——"

She turned to him, pulling a scrap of paper from her breast. "Ethan—I found this," she stammered. Even in the failing light he saw it was the letter to his wife that he had begun the night before and forgotten to destroy. Through his astonishment there ran a fierce thrill of joy. "Matt"—he cried; "if I could ha' done it, would you?"

"Oh, Ethan, Ethan—what's the use?" With a sudden movement she tore the letter in shreds and let them flutter off into the snow.

"Tell me, Matt! Tell me!" he adjured her.

She was silent for a moment; then she said, in such a low tone that he had to stoop his head to hear her: "I used to think of it sometimes, summer nights, when the moon was so bright I couldn't sleep."

His heart reeled with the sweetness of it. "As long ago as that?"

She answered, as if the date had long been fixed for her: "The first time was at Shadow Pond."

"Was that why you gave me my coffee before the others?"

"I don't know. Did I? I was dreadfully put out when you wouldn't go to the picnic with me; and then, when I saw you coming down the road, I thought maybe you'd gone home that way o' purpose; and that made me glad."

They were silent again. They had reached the point where the road dipped to the hollow by Ethan's mill and as they descended the darkness descended with them, dropping down like a black veil from the hemlock boughs.

"I'm tied hand and foot, Matt. There isn't a thing I can do," he began again.

"You must write to me sometimes, Ethan."

"Oh, what good'll writing do? I want to put my hand out and touch you. I want to do for you and care for you. I want to be there when you're sick and when you're lonesome."

"You mustn't think but what I'll do all right."

"You won't need me, you mean? I suppose you'll marry!"

"Oh, Ethan!" she cried.

"I don't know how it is you make me feel, Matt. I'd a'most rather have you dead than that."

"Oh, I wish I was, I wish I was!" she sobbed.

The sound of her weeping shook him out of his dark rage, and he felt ashamed.

"Don't let's talk that way," he whispered.

"Why shouldn't we, when it's true? I've been wishing it every minute of the day."

"Matt! You be quiet! Don't you say it."

"There's never anybody been good to me but you."

"Don't say that either, when I can't lift a hand for you!"

"Yes, but it's true just the same."

They had reached the top of School House Hill and saw Starkfield below them in the twilight. A cutter, mounting the road from the village, passed them by in a joyous flutter of bells, and they straightened themselves and looked ahead with rigid faces. Along the main street lights had begun to shine from the house-fronts and stray figures were turning in here and there at the gates. Ethan, with a touch of his whip, roused the sorrel to a languid trot.

As they drew near the end of the village the cries of children reached them, and they saw a knot of boys, with sleds behind them, scattering across the open space before the church.

"I guess this'll be their last coast for a day or two," Ethan said, looking up at the mild sky.

Mattie was silent, and he added: "We were to have gone down last night."

Still she did not speak and, prompted by an obscure desire to help himself and her through their miserable last hour, he went on discursively: "Ain't it funny we haven't been down together but just that once last winter?"

She answered: "It wasn't often I got down to the village."

"That's so," he said.

They had reached the crest of the Corbury road, and between the indistinct white glimmer of the church and the black curtain of the Varnum spruces the slope stretched away below them without a sled on its length. Some erratic impulse prompted Ethan to say: "How'd you like me to take you down now."

She forced a laugh. "Why, there isn't time!"

"There's all the time we want. Come along!" His one desire now was to postpone the moment of turning the sorrel toward the Flats.

"But the girl," she faltered. "She'll be waiting at the station."

"Well, let her wait. You'd have to if she didn't. Come!"

The authority in his voice seemed to subdue her, and when he had jumped from the sleigh she let him help her out, saying only, with a vague feint of reluctance: "But there isn't a sled round anywheres."

"Yes, there is! Right over there under the spruces."

He threw the bearskin over the sorrel, who stood passively by the roadside, hanging a meditative head. Then he caught Mattie's hand and drew her after him toward the sled.

She seated herself and he took his place behind her, so close that her hair brushed his face. "All right, Matt?" he called out, as if the width of the road had been between them.

She turned her head to say: "It's dreadfully dark. Are you sure you can see?"

He laughed contemptuously: "I could go down this coast with my eyes tied!" and she laughed with him, as if she liked his audacity. Nevertheless he sat still a moment, straining his eyes down the long hill, for it was the most confusing hour of the evening, the hour when the last clearness from the upper sky is merged with the rising night in a blur that disguises landmarks and falsifies distances.

"Now!" he cried.

The sled started with a bound, and they flew on through the dusk, gathering smoothness and speed as they went, with the hollow night opening out below them and the air singing by like an organ. Mattie sat perfectly still, but as they reached the bend at the foot of the hill, where the big elm thrust out a dangerous elbow, he fancied that she shrank a little closer.

"Don't be scared, Matt!" he cried exultantly, as they spun safely past it and flew down the second slope; and when they reached the level ground beyond, and the speed of the sled began to slacken, he heard her give a little laugh of glee.

They sprang off and started to walk back up the hill. Ethan dragged the sled with one hand and passed the other through Mattie's arm.

"Were you scared I'd run you into the elm?" he asked with a boyish laugh.

"I told you I was never scared with you," she answered.

The strange exaltation of his mood had brought on one of his rare fits of boastfulness. "It is a tricky place, though. The least swerve, and we'd never ha' come up again. But I can measure distances to a hair's-breadth—always could."

She murmured: "I always say you've got the surest eye . . ."

Deep silence had fallen with the starless dusk, and they leaned on each other without speaking; but at every step of their climb Ethan said to himself: "It's the last time we'll ever walk together."

They mounted slowly to the top of the hill. When they were abreast of the church he stooped his head to her to ask: "Are you tired?" and she answered, breathing quickly: "It was splendid!"

With a pressure of his arm he guided her toward the Norway spruces. "I guess this sled must be Ned Hale's. Anyhow I'll leave it where I found it." He drew the sled up to the Varnum gate and rested it against the fence. As he raised himself he felt Mattie close to him among the shadows.

"Is this where Ned and Ruth kissed each other?" she whispered breathlessly, and flung her arms about him. Her lips, groping for his, swept over his face, and he held her fast in a rapture of surprise.

"Good-bye—good-bye," she stammered, and kissed him again.

"Oh, Matt, I can't let you go!" broke from him in the same old cry.

She freed herself from his hold and he heard her sobbing. "Oh, I can't go either!" she wailed.

"Matt! What'll we do? What'll we do?"

They clung to each other's hands like children, and her body shook with desperate sobs.

Through the stillness they heard the church clock striking five.

"Oh, Ethan, it's time!" she cried.

He drew her back to him. "Time for what? You don't suppose I'm going to leave you?"

"If I missed my train where'd I go?"

"Where are you going if you catch it?"

She stood silent, her hands lying cold and relaxed in his.

"What's the good of either of us going anywheres without the other one now?" he said.

She remained motionless, as if she had not heard him. Then she snatched her hands from his, threw her arms about his neck, and pressed her wet cheek to his face. "Ethan! Ethan! I want you to take me down again!"

"Down where?"

"The coast. Right off. So 't we'll never come up any more."

"Matt! What on earth do you mean?"

She put her lips close against his ear to say: "Right into the big elm. You said you could. So 't we'd never have to leave each other any more."

"Why, what are you talking of? You're crazy!"

"I'm not crazy; but I will be if I leave you."

"Oh, Matt, Matt—" he groaned.

She tightened her fierce hold about his neck. "Ethan, where'll I go if I leave you? I don't know how to get along alone. You said so yourself just now. Nobody but you was ever good to me. And there'll be that strange girl in the house . . . and she'll sleep in my bed, where I used to lay nights and listen to hear you come upstairs. ..."

The words were like fragments torn from his heart. With them came the hated vision of the house he was going back to—of the stairs he would have to go up every night, of the woman who would wait for him there. And the sweetness of Mattie's avowal, the wild wonder of knowing at last that all that had happened to him had happened to her too, made the other vision more abhorrent, the other life more intolerable to return to . . .

Her pleadings still came to him between short sobs, but he no longer heard what she was saying. Her hat had slipped back, and he was stroking her hair. He wanted to get the feeling of it into his hand, so that it would sleep there like a seed in winter. Once he found her mouth again, and they seemed to be by the pond together in the burning August sun. But his cheek touched hers, and it was cold and full of weeping, and he saw the road to the Flats under the night and heard the whistle of the train up the line.

The black trees swathed them in night and silence. They might have been in their coffins underground. He said to himself: "Perhaps it'll feel like this . . ." and then again: "After this I sha'n't feel anything. . ." Suddenly he heard the old sorrel whinny across the road, and thought: "He's wondering why he doesn't get his supper. . ."

"Come," Mattie whispered, tugging at his hand.

Her sombre violence constrained him: she seemed the embodied instrument of fate. He pulled the sled out, blinking like a night-bird as he passed from the shade of the spruces into the relative clearness of the open. The slope below them was deserted. All Starkfield was at supper, and not a figure crossed the open space before the church. The sky, swollen with the clouds that announce a thaw, hung as low as before a summer storm. He strained his eyes through the dimness, and they seemed less keen, less capable than usual.

He took his seat on the sled and Mattie instantly placed herself in front of him. Her hat had fallen into the snow and his lips were in her hair. He stretched out his legs, drove his heels into the road to keep the sled from slipping forward, and bent her head back between his hands. Then suddenly he sprang up again.

"Get up," he ordered her.

It was the tone she always heeded, but she cowered down in her seat, repeating vehemently: "No, no, no!"

"Get up!"

"Why?"

"I want to sit in front."

"No, no! How can you steer in front?"

"I don't have to. We'll follow the track."

They spoke in smothered whispers, as though the night were listening.

"Get up! Get up!" he urged her; but she kept on repeating: "Why do you want to sit in front?"

"Because I—because I want to feel you holding me," he stammered, and dragged her to her feet.

The answer seemed to satisfy her, or else she yielded to the power of his voice. He bent down, feeling in the obscurity for the glassy slide worn by preceding coasters, and placed the runners carefully between its edges. She waited while he seated himself with crossed legs in the front of the sled; then she crouched quickly down at his back and clasped her arms about him. Her breath in his neck set him shuddering again, and he almost sprang from his seat. But in a flash he remembered the alternative. She was right: this was better than parting. He leaned back and drew her mouth to his. . .

Just as they started he heard the sorrel's whinny again, and the familiar wistful call, and all the confused images it brought with it, went with him down the first reach of the road. Half-way down there was a sudden drop, then a rise, and after that another long delirious descent. As they took wing for this it seemed to him that they were flying indeed, flying far up into the cloudy night, with Starkfield immeasurably below them, falling away like a speck in space. . . Then the big elm shot up ahead, lying in wait for them at the bend of the road, and he said between his teeth: "We can fetch it; I know we can fetch it——"

As they flew toward the tree Mattie pressed her arms tighter, and her blood seemed to be in his veins. Once or twice the sled swerved a little under them. He slanted his body to keep it headed for the elm, repeating to himself again and again: "I know we can fetch it;" and little phrases she had spoken ran through his head and danced before him on the air. The big tree loomed bigger and closer, and as they bore down on it he thought: "It's waiting for us: it seems to know." But suddenly his wife's face, with twisted monstrous lineaments, thrust itself between him and his goal, and he made an instinctive movement to brush it aside. The sled swerved in response, but he righted it again, kept it straight, and drove down on the black projecting mass. There was a last instant when the air shot past him like millions of fiery wires; and then the elm . . .

The sky was still thick, but looking straight up he saw a single star, and tried vaguely to reckon whether it were Sirius, or—or— The effort tired him too much, and he closed his heavy lids and thought that he would sleep. . . The stillness was so profound that he heard a little animal twittering somewhere near by under the snow. It made a small frightened cheep like a field-mouse, and he wondered languidly if it were hurt. Then he understood that it must be in pain: pain so excruciating that he seemed, mysteriously, to feel it shooting through his own body. He tried in vain to roll over in the direction of the sound, and stretched his left arm out across the snow. And now it was as though he felt rather than heard the twittering; it seemed to be under his palm, which rested on something soft and springy. The thought of the animal's suffering was intolerable to him, and he struggled to raise himself, and could not, because a rock, or some huge mass, seemed to be lying on him. But he continued to finger about cautiously with his left hand, thinking he might get hold of the little creature and help it; and all at once he knew that the soft thing he had touched was Mattie's hair and that his hand was on her face.

He dragged himself to his knees, the monstrous load on him moving with him as he moved, and his hand went over and over her face, and he felt that the twittering came from her lips . . .

He got his face down close to hers, with his ear to her mouth, and in the darkness he saw her eyes open and heard her say his name.

"Oh, Matt, I thought we'd fetched it," he moaned; and far off, up the hill, he heard the sorrel whinny, and thought: "I ought to be getting him his feed. . ."

. . . .

. . . .

The querulous drone ceased as I entered Frome's kitchen, and of the two women sitting there I could not tell which had been the speaker.

One of them, on my appearing, raised her tall bony figure from her seat, not as if to welcome me—for she threw me no more than a brief glance of surprise—but simply to set about preparing the meal which Frome's absence had delayed. A slatternly calico wrapper hung from her shoulders and the wisps of her thin gray hair were drawn away from a high forehead and fastened at the back by a broken comb. She had pale opaque eyes which revealed nothing and reflected nothing, and her narrow lips were of the same sallow colour as her face.

The other woman was much smaller and slighter. She sat huddled in an arm-chair near the stove, and when I came in she turned her head quickly toward me, without the least corresponding movement of her body. Her hair was as gray as her companion's, her face as bloodless and shrivelled, but amber-tinted, with swarthy shadows sharpening the nose and hollowing the temples. Under her shapeless dress her body kept its limp immobility, and her dark eyes had the bright witch-like stare that disease of the spine often gives.

Even for that part of the country the kitchen was a poor-looking place. With the exception of the dark-eyed woman's chair, which looked like a soiled relic of luxury bought at a country auction, the furniture was of the roughest kind. Three coarse china plates and a broken-nosed milk-jug had been set on a greasy table scored with knife-cuts, and a couple of straw-bottomed chairs and a kitchen dresser of unpainted pine stood out meagrely against the plaster walls.

"My, it's cold here! The fire must be 'most out," Frome said, glancing about him apologetically as he followed me in.

The tall woman, who had moved away from us toward the dresser, took no notice; but the other, from her cushioned niche, answered complainingly, in a high thin voice: "It's on'y just been made up this very minute. Zeena fell asleep and slep' ever so long, and I thought I'd be frozen stiff before I could wake her up and and get her to 'tend to it."

I knew then that it was she who had been speaking when we entered.

Her companion, who was just coming back to the table with the remains of a cold mince-pie in a battered pie-dish, set down her unappetizing burden without appearing to hear the accusation brought against her.

Frome stood hesitatingly before her as she advanced; then he looked at me and said: "This is my wife, Mis' Frome." After another interval he added, turning toward the figure in the arm-chair: "And this is Miss Mattie Silver. . ."

. . . .

Mrs. Hale, tender soul, had pictured me as lost in the Flats and buried under a snow-drift; and so lively was her satisfaction on seeing me safely restored to her the next morning, that I felt my peril had caused me to advance several degrees in her favour.

Great was her amazement, and that of old Mrs. Varnum, on learning that Ethan Frome's old horse had carried me to and from Corbury Junction through the worst blizzard of the winter; greater still their surprise when they heard that his master had taken me in for the night.

Beneath their wondering exclamations I felt a secret curiosity to know what impressions I had received from my night in the Frome household, and divined that the best way of breaking down their reserve was to let them try to penetrate mine. I therefore confined myself to saying, in a matter-of-fact tone, that I had been received with great kindness, and that Frome had made a bed for me in a room on the ground floor which seemed in happier days to have been fitted up as a kind of writing-room or study.

"Well," Mrs. Hale mused, "in such a storm I suppose he felt he couldn't do less than take you in—but I guess it went hard with Ethan. I don't believe but what you're the only stranger has set foot in that house for over twenty years. He's that proud he don't even like his oldest friends to go there; and I don't know as any do, any more, except myself and the doctor. . ."

"You still go there, Mrs. Hale?" I ventured.

"I used to go a good deal after the accident, when I was first married; but after a while I got to think it made 'em feel worse to see us. And then one thing and another came, and my own troubles . . . But I generally make out to drive over there round about New Year's, and once in the summer. Only I always try to pick a day when Ethan's off somewheres. It's bad enough to see the two women sitting there —but his face, when he looks round that bare place, just kills me . . . You see, I can look back and call it up in his mother's day, before their troubles."

Old Mrs. Varnum, by this time, had gone up to bed, and her daughter and I were sitting alone, after supper, in the austere seclusion of the horse-hair parlour. Mrs. Hale glanced at me tentatively, as though trying to see how much footing my conjectures gave her; and I guessed that if she had kept silence till now it was because she had been waiting, through all the years, for some one who should see what she alone had seen.

I waited to let her trust in me gather strength before I said: "Yes, it's pretty bad, seeing all three of them there together."

She drew her mild brows into a frown of pain. "It was just awful from the beginning. I was here in the house when they were carried up—they laid Mattie Silver in the room you're in. She and I were great friends, and she was to have been my bridesmaid that spring . . . When she came to I went up to her and stayed with her all night. They gave her things to quiet her, and she didn't know much till to'rd morning, and then all of a sudden she woke up just like herself, and looked straight at me out of her big eyes, and said . . . Oh, I don't know why I'm telling you all this," Mrs. Hale broke off, crying.

She took off her spectacles, wiped the moisture from them, and put them on again with an unsteady hand. "It got about the next day," she went on, "that Zeena Frome had sent Mattie off in a hurry because she had a hired girl coming, and the folks here could never rightly tell what she and Ethan were doing that night coasting, when they'd ought to have been on their way to the Flats to ketch the train . . . I never knew myself what Zeena thought—I don't to this day. Nobody knows Zeena's thoughts. Anyhow, when she heard o' the accident she came right in and stayed with Ethan over to the minister's, where they'd carried him. And as soon as the doctors said that Mattie could be moved, Zeena sent for her and took her back to the farm."

"And there she's been ever since?"

Mrs. Hale answered simply: "There was nowhere else for her to go"; and my heart tightened at the thought of the hard necessities of the poor.

"Yes, there she's been," Mrs. Hale continued, "and Zeena's done for her, and done for Ethan, as good as she could. It was a miracle, considering how sick she was—but she seemed to be raised right up just when the call came to her. Not as she's ever given up doctoring, and she's had sick spells right along; but she's had the strength given her to care for those two for over twenty years, and before the accident came she thought she couldn't even care for herself."

Mrs. Hale paused a moment, and I remained silent, plunged in the vision of what her words evoked. "It's horrible for them all," I murmured.

"Yes: it's pretty bad. And they ain't any of 'em easy people either. Mattie was, before the accident; I never knew a sweeter nature. But she's suffered too much—that's what I always say when folks tell me how she's soured. And Zeena, she was always cranky. Not but what she bears with Mattie wonderful—I've seen that myself. But sometimes the two of them get going at each other, and then Ethan's face'd break your heart . . . When I see that, I think it's him that suffers most . . . anyhow it ain't Zeena, because she ain't got the time . . . It's a pity, though," Mrs.

Hale ended, sighing, "that they're all shut up there'n that one kitchen. In the summer-time, on pleasant days, they move Mattie into the parlour, or out in the door-yard, and that makes it easier . . . but winters there's the fires to be thought of; and there ain't a dime to spare up at the Fromes'."

Mrs. Hale drew a deep breath, as though her memory were eased of its long burden, and she had no more to say; but suddenly an impulse of complete avowal seized her.

She took off her spectacles again, leaned toward me across the bead-work table-cover, and went on with lowered voice: "There was one day, about a week after the accident, when they all thought Mattie couldn't live. Well, I say it's a pity she did. I said it right out to our minister once, and he was shocked at me. Only he wasn't with me that morning when she first came to . . . and I say, if she'd ha' died, Ethan might ha' lived; and the way they are now, I don't see's there's much difference between the Fromes up at the farm and the Fromes down in the graveyard; 'cept that down there they're all quiet, and the women have got to hold their tongues."

THE END

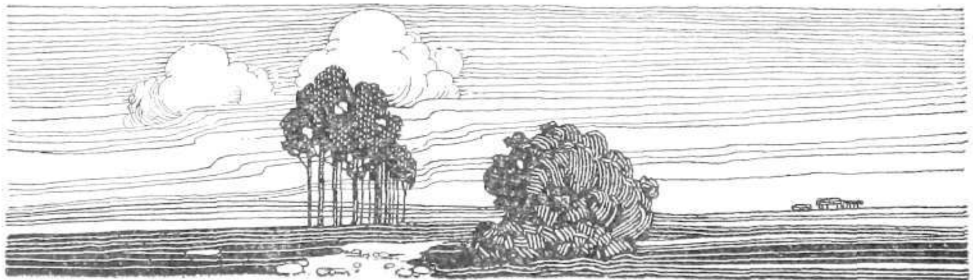
OF ONE WHO WALKS ALONE

By Thomas S. Jones, Jr.

THESE are the ways of one who walks alone,
  Sweet silent ways that lead toward twilight skies,
  Bees softly winging where a low wind sighs
Through the hills' hollow cool and clover-blown.

These are the ways that call one back again
  To old forgotten things in faded years,
  Swift on a moment of remembered tears
They stand from out the dust where they have lain.

These are the ways life's simple secrets bless,
  Keen homely scents borne by each haunted wind,—
  Here in the silence one may ever find
That last strange peace whose name is loneliness.



The Jungfernstieg wears an air of leisurely elegance and pleasure-seeking prosperity.—Page 446.

HAMBURG AND ITS HARBOR

By Ralph D. Paine

THE rise of Germany as a naval power of the foremost rank has been flamboyant and startling. Her battleships, afloat and building, recently afflicted England with acute nightmares and have even influenced the United States to share in the ruinous scramble for bigger dreadnoughts, heavier guns, and more of them. With far less noise and alarm, however, the modern Germany has suffered a sea change of another and more formidable kind. Her armed fleet is as yet untried, its prestige is a matter for the experts to calculate on paper, but the merchant marine has challenged the supremacy of British ships and sailors and is waging a pacific war for the commerce of the world, from the Baltic to Zanzibar, and from China to Peru. The industrial empire of the Fatherland, militant, intelligent, and highly organized, has already demolished the ancient doctrine that Britannia rules the waves.

So small is the strip of coast and so few the harbors facing the cold, tempestuous North Sea that the German people have hammered out a maritime destiny for themselves rather by stress of circumstances than by natural inclination and environment. They were compelled to turn seaward because the land was overcrowded and they must find new markets for their wares. As a result of this economic pressure, the chief seaport, Hamburg, was marvellously quickened by the spirit of the new nation with its slogan "Made-in-Germany," and became the great gateway of traffic in manufactured products outward bound and of raw materials brought home from the ends of the earth. In its tonnage of shipping and merchandise, Hamburg has wrested second place from London, a fact to wonder at.

It is to be regretted that so many Americans hastily scan such statements as these, fight shy of the statistics usually accompanying them, and contemplate Hamburg merely as a port of entry and departure for transatlantic steamers filled with persons bent on going somewhere else with all possible despatch. True, the city has almost no ruins and somewhat lacks the atmosphere of oderiferous dilapidation so ardently sought and gloated over by those pilgrims who would get their money's worth during a summer abroad. The people are clean, busy, and self-respecting, and they have made a beautiful metropolis of this capital of the Free State of Hamburg, and ancient Hansa town.

In that dimly remote age when Charlemagne wielded the mailed fist, a castle was built on a hill between the Elbe and a confluent little river called the Alster as an outpost of defence against the Slavs. Through the succeeding centuries the shipping sought the deeper water of the Elbe and the road to the sea, and, as elsewhere, the old town huddled close to the wharves and warehouses. In times more modern the city spread around the pleasant, wooded Alster. Instead of dredging this stream and defiling its banks with sheds and docks and bulkheads, a sense of beauty moved the Teutonic mind to transform it into a lake, preserved inviolate for the enjoyment of all good Hamburgers now and hereafter. And so, like a great jewel, the Alster shines in the very midst of the city which looks out upon a sort of fairy-land from its boulevards, hotels, offices, and stores.

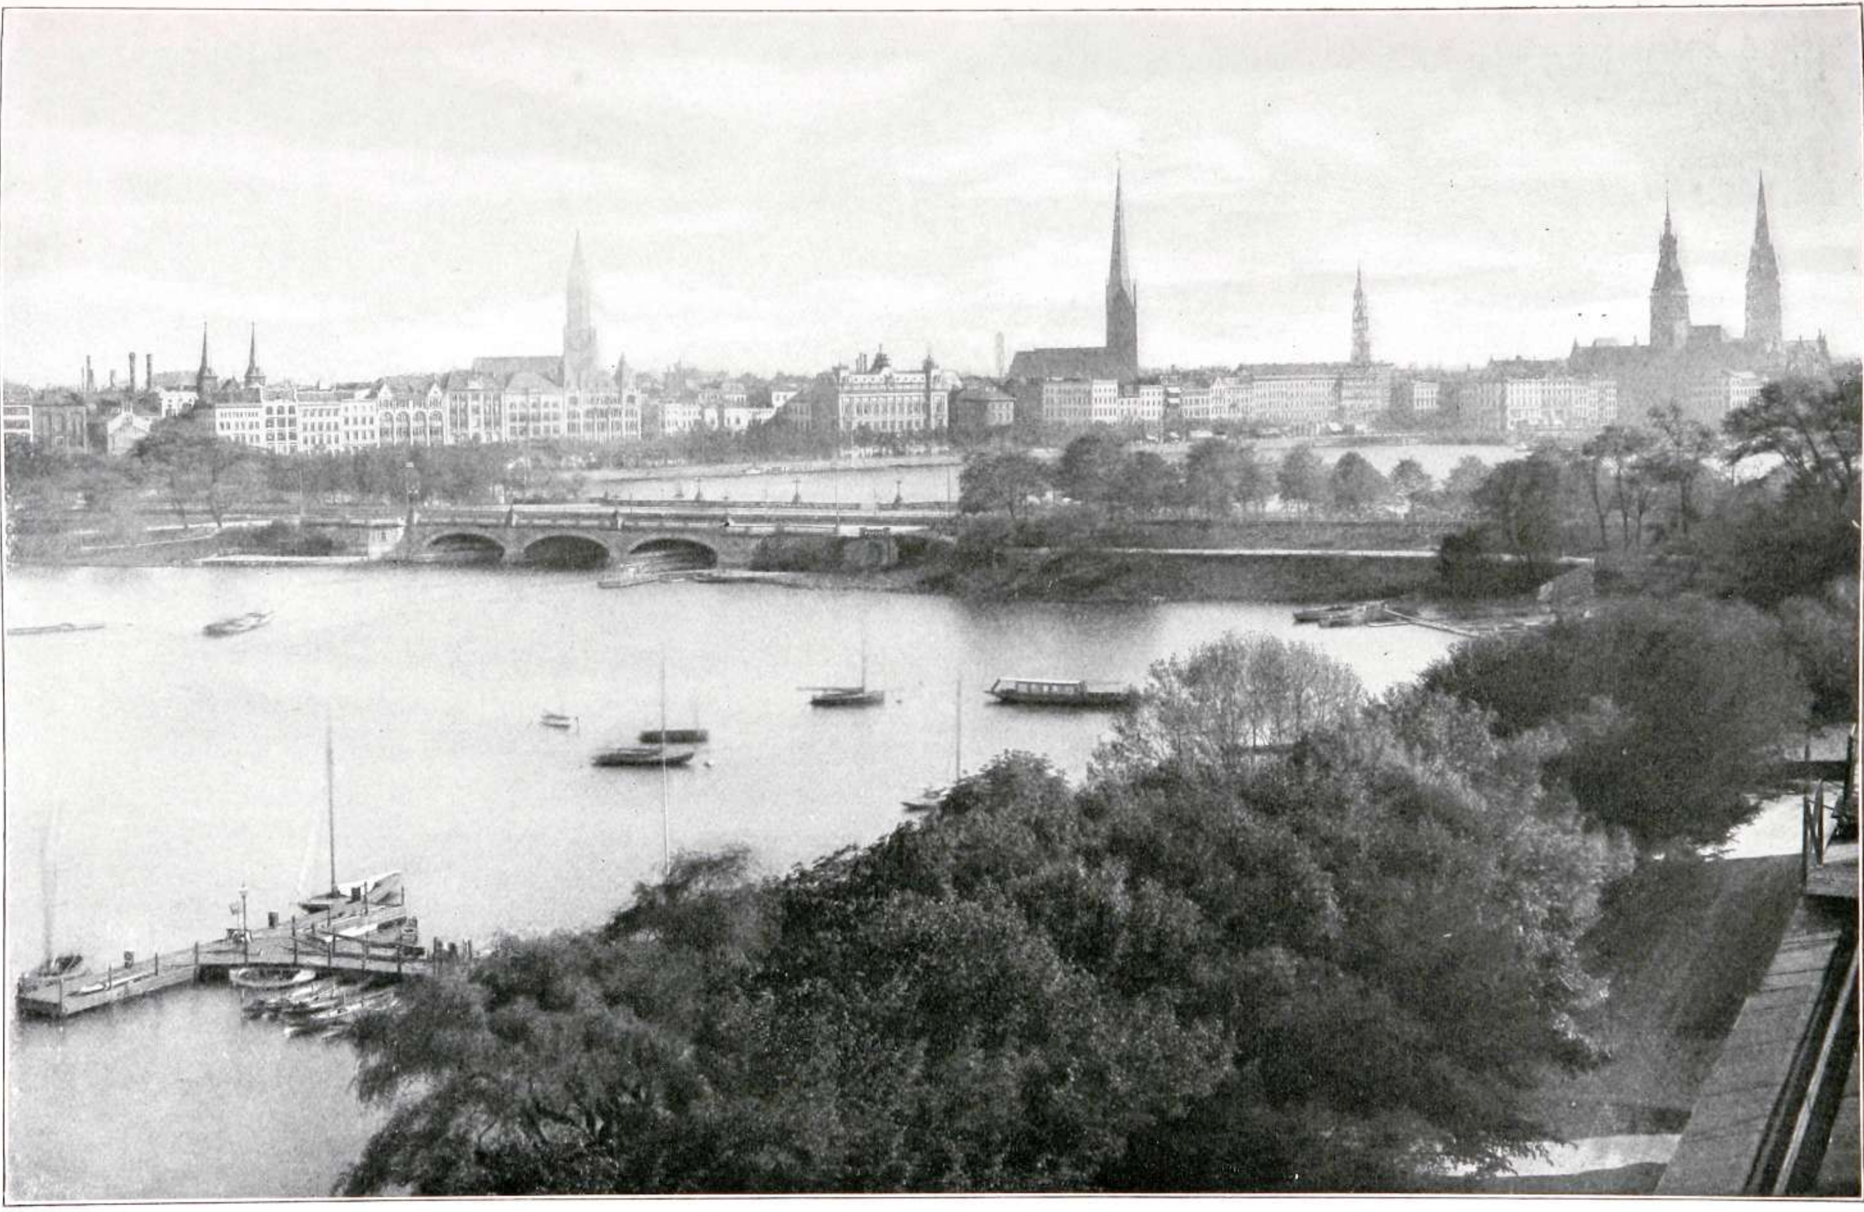
There are really two lakes, separated by a bridge of noble architecture, the smaller in the business quarter of Hamburg, the larger extending spaciously in a region of villas, parks, gardens, and promenades where dwell the wealthy merchants and others on whom fortune has smiled. Small steamers ply between the Binnen-Alster and the Aussen-Alster, and instead of being shot home through jammed and stifling subways, these favored commuters are wafted over the pleasant water while the bands are playing in the pavilions on shore and the sailing yachts skim to and fro.

Like other North Sea ports, Antwerp and Amsterdam, for instance, Hamburg has a net-work of ancient canals and basins and is a city which seems more or less afloat; but this bright expanse of the Alster, so lovingly conserved and beautified, is unique among the world's great centres of trade. Commerce may be sordid and money-getting a soulless business, but your German, who is eminently successful at both, is in his heart the most sentimental of beings. In proof of which seeming paradox, please to tarry in Hamburg long enough to descry the Alster. There are great cities, no names need be mentioned, in which this lovely sheet of water would have been regarded as so much waste area to be filled in by the dump-cart of the contractor, plotted and staked by the real estate operator, and blighted with brick and mortar by the building speculator.

As one passes along the Jungfernstieg or the Alsterdamm, handsome thoroughfares which border the smaller lake, it is not easy to realize that the clamorous, grimy business of a vast harbor is surging no more than a few minutes' walk distant. The Jungfernstieg wears an air of leisurely elegance and pleasure-seeking prosperity. The restaurants are crowded, there is much excellent music and hearty eating and drinking, a great display of automobiles and smartly turned-out carriages suggesting Fifth Avenue, Unter den Linden, or Piccadilly. At home or abroad, people with money to spend for luxuries buy things pretty much alike and travel the same merry-go-round of fashions and diversions.

These first impressions veer to another tack as one becomes better acquainted with the life of Hamburg. Its leisure class is much smaller than appears, the glitter is mostly on the surface, and nobody thinks less of his neighbor because he harkens diligently to the gospel of hard work. A hundred years ago our own ports of Boston and Salem, then filled with deep-water ships, were notable for a merchant aristocracy engaged in commerce over seas. The sons of these families went from the solid, square-sided brick mansions to the counting-rooms on the wharves, and thence to forecastle and cabin, earning promotion step by step until they gained command of East Indiamen and China tea packets, quitting the sea thereafter to become merchants ashore and owners of square-rigged fleets. Before this era had vanished Harriet Martineau, visiting Salem, remarked of its society:

"These enterprising merchants speak of Fayal and the Azores as if they were close at hand. They have a large acquaintance at Cairo. They know the grave of Napoleon at St. Helena and have wild tales to tell of Mozambique and Madagascar and stores of ivory to show from there. They speak of the power of the king of Muscat and are sensible of the riches of Arabia.



View of the Lombards Bridge and the city.

Main Entrance of the Emigrant Station or "model town."

Anybody will give you anecdotes from Canton and descriptions of the Society and Sandwich Islands."

On a far larger scale, for its population falls just short of a million, these social conditions are very typical of the Hamburg of to-day. The manufacturing interests are large and varied but her absorbing affairs are those of the sea and her most powerful citizens are the lords of commerce. New York is the new Babel, so the census tells us, and London houses all races under Heaven, but unless one takes pains to seek out the foreign quarters, the one city appears thoroughly American, the other as completely British. Hamburg is German to the backbone, but there is a sensible difference. Its spirit is more genuinely cosmopolitan. It is the meeting place of the long trails from everywhere to anywhere. Whether it be in a dingy Rathskeller of the harbor front or in the most pretentious dining hall of the Jungfernstieg, there is talk in other languages than German, there are faces from other climes to pique the curiosity, and there is the tang of romance and mystery inspired by these glimpses beyond the horizon.

The ear becomes accustomed to hearing Spanish spoken wherever people congregate for business or pleasure. A great part of the trade of South and Central America flows through Hamburg, whose steamers are to be found in every port of both coasts. Hither come the cattle kings of the Argentine, the rich merchants of Lima and Valparaiso, the dictators of explosive little republics, the coffee magnates of Brazil, who will talk to you in Portuguese as well as French and Spanish. Pervasive, too, is the German travelling salesman, as great a rover as the Hamburg sailor, who swings around the globe in a most enchanting orbit and spices the chat of the restaurants with tales of Capetown, Batavia, or Nagasaki. He it is who has caused England much disquietude and gloom, for this ubiquitous person, linguist, diplomat, and trading expert, fills the holds of Hamburg ships with cargoes for the markets of every ocean.

In divers other ways, the people and the interests of distant countries weave themselves into the fabric of one's impressions of Hamburg. New York is the greatest of seaports, but its maritime atmosphere is bounded by the water front, and small interest is taken in seafaring. Its old men own no ships and its young men have no desire to seek blue water, which has been given over to the foreigner. A hundred of the finest ocean steamers that pass in by Sandy Hook might go to the bottom and if there were no American passengers on board, the only mourners in New York would be the underwriters' agents. The so-called steamship trust or "combine," organized in this country with a great fanfare of trumpets, has passed into English control and recalls unhappy memories cf misdirected financial and commercial endeavor.

Emigrants bound out to the promised land, America.

Hamburg owns great fleets of its own ships and her sons are in them. Ties stronger than those of trade link the homes of this port with isles and roadsteads scattered and remote, east of Suez and under the Southern Cross. All this intimate interest in the affairs of the sea is bound to make itself felt, to take hold of the imagination, before ever you have a glimpse of the shipping itself. That one does not have to go first to the harbor to know he is in an immensely active and prosperous seaport is curious in a way. It could hardly be said of Herald Square or Central Park West.

On the Alsterdamm, facing the inner lake, is a building, vast and dignified, which many a monarch of sorts would deem worthy to be added to his collection of palaces. This is the home of the Hamburg-Americkanische Packetfahrt Actien-Gesellschaft, a few of whose ships comprise what New York knows as the Hamburg-American Line. It may surprise sundry of our tourists to know that this is only one of fifty routes travelled by the vessels of this, the greatest of shipping corporations, whose house-flag flies above the decks of four hundred steamers manned by twenty-three thousand officers and seamen who visit three hundred and fifty ports during the year. When statistics are as large and eloquent as these, it is difficult to pass them by on the other side. It would be something to remember if the four hundred captains of the Hamburg-American ships could be assembled in this building whence they receive their sailing orders that take them to every nook and corner of the watery globe.

One of the quays and warehouses of the Hamburg-American Company.

Hamburg is the chief European port of departure for emigrants bound to America, and the German government has given this company a monopoly of transporting them. On the water front is the emigrant station in which are gathered, year by year, so many thousands of brave, ignorant, hopeful men and women who seek kindlier fortune in a strange and distant land. The station is, in fact, a model town, planned, equipped, and maintained with that elaborate, scientific thoroughness which is characteristic of the modern Germany. This town, surrounded by a wall of masonry, comprises many small streets adorned with trees and flower-beds and lined with rows of neat, ornamental buildings, detached and resembling cottages. There are several churches, attractive to behold, in which the followers of various creeds may worship with their own priests, pastors, and ceremonials. There are even hotels, apart from the general living quarters, and modestly luxurious, where for a small extra payment the emigrant may lord it over the common herd. A brass band gives daily concerts, and here you have the practical yet sentimental German in another guise. He knows that homesickness swells the hospital list and that music and dancing will cheer the heart of the forlorn, bewildered emigrant.

As these aliens stare wonderingly from the crowded fore-decks of the steamers in New York harbor, they appear unkempt, uncouth, more or less barbarous. But the critical spectator should view them before they have been ground through the Hamburg mill where as many as four thousand at one time may be awaiting shipment. These wild-eyed, shaggy peasants in boots and shawls and furs and sheepskins seem to themselves to be dwelling in a place of enchantment which must be a foretaste of the golden America. There is first an ordeal to be endured, however, after eighteen interpreters have sorted out the jumble of men and women fetched by rail and barge from parts of Europe that are still feudal, mediæval, and unwashed. Polish, Russian, Lithuanian, Bohemian, Croatian, Servian, Dalmatian, Roumanian, Slav, Hungarian, and the rest, they are sifted and inspected and tagged and boiled and scrubbed and disinfected within an inch of their frightened lives, and the transformation makes them look comparatively spick-and-span.

This huge, smoothly-geared machine for recruiting and shipping these people is most admirably conducted, and perhaps we in America should be grateful that such good care is taken of our citizens in the raw. One cannot help reflecting, however, that such a system is but a part of the traffic of a great shipping corporation which makes emigration as easy and attractive as possible for the sake of the passage money. They are so much human merchandise, and their personal destinies, and the problems created by their great inflow into the slums and ghettos of American cities, are of no concern to the capable officials of the model town on the Hamburg harbor-side, a show place peculiarly interesting yet disturbing because of the very perfection of its operation. It suggests the arrangement of the docks and quays, so devised as to handle every manner of cargo with the greatest economy and efficiency, to stimulate commerce and to divert it from other ports. Whether or not it is for the best interests of the United States that the same kind of ingenious intelligence should be employed in stimulating an incessant tide of emigration from Northern Europe is a debatable question of grave import.

Landing place of the busy little harbor ferry steamers.

That Hamburg has spent one hundred million dollars in the creation of its modern harbor and is making ready to invest fifty millions more in bettering these facilities conveys in tabloid form an idea of the sheer bigness and boldness of this German competition for the business of the seas. Cuxhaven, at the mouth of the Elbe, is seventy-five miles distant, so that Hamburg is far inland and most of this long stretch of river had to be dredged to make a channel for deep-draught ships. It has required something more than lusty strength and money to achieve such things as these. There has been also the vision, the imagination, the faith in the future, grand strategy displayed not in war, but in peace.

At first sight, this harbor is a confused picture, magnificent for its movement and color, but not to be viewed in passing as one is able to survey the sweep of the Scheldt in front of Antwerp or the Thames below London. The Elbe appears to be lost among the docks which extend gigantic arms in every direction, not as series of enclosed basins, but as stone wharves beside which the ships rise and fall with the small tide, just as they moor at the wooden piers of New York. The port is composed of many Hafens or harbors whose banks are the walls of masonry partly enclosing them.

Hamburg and the adjoining city of Altona rise from the water's edge, their situation boldly commanding, and look across the river to this world of modern docks and quays which is reached by means of little ferry steamers that dodge and skitter in and out among the great ships like so many bright insects. They run from one Hafen to another, amiably pause to scrape alongside vessels anchored in the stream, perhaps transferring a group of sunburned seamen with their corded sea-chests, and poke into a myriad of curious corners. To board one of these little steamers is to visit far countries in miniature for the cost of a few pennies, to gaze at the ships and sailors of some sixty-odd different lines, steam and sail, which depart from Hamburg.

Geography flavored with adventure may be studied to advantage merely by stepping ashore and walking along one of these docks between the ranks of ships and warehouses. The outgoing merchandise is stencilled with the names of queer, outlandish ports which you thought existed only to addle the intellects of school children. All around the coast of Africa the Germans send their steamers to wait off sandy beaches, comber-swept, or to creep into torrid lagoons to traffic with kinky-headed natives. Woerman boats, German East-Africa, German West-Africa, and Hamburg-American packets, you must go to Hamburg and board one of these, or catch it en route, as Col. Theodore Roosevelt did, if you would go steaming away to the ports that run from Aden to Delagoa Bay and from the Bight of Benin to Benguela. And you will readily understand, after a trip around the harbor, why Herr Karl Hagenbeck chose Hamburg as the site of his huge zoological park, or wild animal department store.

The Germans have refused to write the epitaph of the deep-water, square-rigged ship.—Page 453.

That sacred British institution, the "P. and O.," has been seriously disturbed by the audacity of the Germans in invading the ocean trade of the Orient and winning popularity among passengers by treating them, not with haughty condescension, but with genial, solicitous courtesy. Here you may see the large, comfortable steamers, all berthed in a row, which are familiar to the mooring buoys of Singapore, Hong-Kong, and Yokohama. Beyond them lift the masts and funnels of the Kosmos steamers which double the Horn and skirt the west coast as far as Puget Sound, and the German-Australian line which flaunts the tri-color of the Fatherland beside the red ensign of England in the roadsteads of Melbourne and Sydney.

Hamburg harbor makes its appeal en masse, as a pageant whose scenes are grouped with a kind of splendid prodigality. One great, indented Hafen after another opens to view and out in the fairway are other fleets of steamers, clustered in compact flotillas, as if they could not find room to dock. And by far the greater number of them fly the German flag. The game of world politics is being played to more purpose among these wonderfully industrious docks and quays than in the chancelleries of Europe and these weather-beaten skippers and this great navy of German merchant seamen are quietly extending the influence and power of their nation to an extent not generally understood.

A bit of the Hamburg water front.

To see a number of sailing ships in other ports is to mourn that their days are numbered, to feel something akin to pathos. This is not true of the Segelschiff-Hafen of Hamburg because the Germans, almost alone among seafaring races, have refused to write the epitaph of the deep-water, square-rigged ship. They have created a modern steel fleet of much larger vessels than any other of their kind afloat, engaged, for the most part, in the South American trade. Of these, the Preussen attracted notice not long ago by stranding in the English Channel. Her sister ship, the Potosi has broken all sailing records between Peru and Europe during voyage after voyage, her average speed as fast as that of most cargo steamers and surpassing the historic achievements of the American sky-sail clippers of the last century.

The fish market and some of the North Sea fleet of schooners.

This Free Port is a large city of warehouses and docks covering more than twenty-five hundred acres of land and water.—Page 456.

Equipped with all manner of auxiliary engines for handling heavy sails, for lighting by electricity and heating by steam, these huge, five-masted ships seem to have revived an almost vanished epoch. Their crews are no broken, drunken pier-head jumpers and greenhorns swept up from the scum of the water front, but sturdy, ruddy German younkers, every man of them. They take fiddle, trombone, cornet, and accordeon to sea with them and it does the heart good to hear one of these forecastle orchestras, perhaps twenty strong, playing lustily and with no small skill wherever these ships cast anchor. American boys forsook the sea largely because American ships were floating hells, an ugly truth too often glossed over in discussing our lost merchant marine.

Any guidebook of Hamburg will supply the ballast of facts and figures concerning the highly developed methods of mechanical helps whereby merchandise is handled between ship and quay with more speed and at less cost than anywhere else. The gist of it is that the port displays the German industrial and commercial efficiency at the very top notch and goes far to explain why the Reichstag has ungrudgingly voted larger and larger naval estimates. The Kaiser's people have wealth and men afloat that are worth protecting, and worth fighting for, if needs be.

The backgrounds of the harbor add much to the impressions of extraordinary vitality and enterprise. Ship-building plants make a continual clangor, the gaunt frames of ocean steamers and battleships in the making tower from the water's edge, and among the serried ribs and girders toil ten thousand artisans. Beyond the funnels of the shipping are the taller chimneys of factories and power-houses. In the city itself, admirable because of the dignified solidity of its architecture, old buildings are being swept away on every hand and from the harbor the scaffolding surrounding the new and larger structures looks like so many gigantic cobwebs scattered here and there, suggesting bits of Manhattan Island as seen from the North River ferry.

Although war and conflagration wiped out much of the Hamburg of the Middle Ages, there still survives the region of the old town called the Fleete, in which the streets are all waterways and the inhabitants may fairly be called amphibious. Here the houses are tall and very narrow, leaning toward each other across the tiny canals in a tottering, friendly fashion, like ancient worthies inclined to gossip. Aforetime substantial merchants dwelt among the Fleetes and ingeniously hoisted their cargoes from barges floating beside the basement windows. These quaint thoroughfares are still used for traffic of a humbler sort, but the descendants of those early merchants now enjoy their villas on the shores of the sweeter, cleaner Alster.

At low tide, most of the Fleetes are streaks of mud, and a kindly government, reluctant to have the denizens drowned or their wares wetted through forgetfulness, takes pains to warn them just when the Fleetes will fill with water. On the harbor front is a bastion mounting two guns. As soon as the word comes by telegraph from Cuxhaven that the tide is at the flood, three shots boom the warning. If the rise at Hamburg is likely to be higher than normal, three more signal guns sound across the city and there is a great scampering in the Fleetes and the muddy little streams threading among the narrow chasms of mouldering walls are emptied of humanity in a twinkling. Doubtless many a Hamburg child, cradled in luxury, envies with all its little heart the ragged urchins of the slums of Grimm or the Alte Groninger-strasse down by the river who have only to skip outdoors to paddle in the mud, who shriek with fearsome joy when the cannon thunder the tide signals at the Seewartenhohe, and hang out of their own windows until the Fleete is filled and ready for sailing boats made of a bit of board or a discarded wooden shoe.

There are more pretentious canals in Hamburg, but none so enjoyable as those of the Fleete quarter, which is neither Dutch nor Venetian but with a flavor of both. One of these larger waterways, the Zoll-Canal, connects the custom-houses with the Free Port into which all merchandise not liable to duty finds its way and can be transhipped unhampered by red-tape.

There are more pretentious canals in Hamburg, but none so enjoyable as those of the Fleete quarter.

This Free Port is a large city of warehouses and docks covering more than twenty-five hundred acres of land and water, and wholly distinct from the numerous Hafens on have floated down the upper Elbe from the heart of Bohemia, steam-lighters, North Sea fishing schooners, and what-not, and every one of them bent on catching the

A glimpse of the Old Fleete quarter.

the other side of the Elbe. Along this reach of the harbor front, what the people call "an der Wasserkant," moves the jostling river traffic which the idler loves to watch. The tug-boats are small, innumerable, and busy to the verge of frenzy, their temperament more Gallic than Teutonic. It is unfair to chide them for lack of poise, however, because there is such a stupid tangle of market-boats from the Marschlande and the Vierlande, long barges that turn of the tide. They must be yanked this way and shoved that, and every now and then an ocean-going steamer comes surging through the ruck, like a whale among the minnows.

To the eye, Hamburg and Altona are one and indivisible, although they lie in different German states, the latter in the province of Schleswig-Holstein. A more important fact, which sticks in the memory of every true sailor who knows the ports of the world is that St. Pauli overlaps the boundary line between the two. In many a forecastle you may hear them sigh for a night on the Bowery, or the Skipper Street of Antwerp, or the Ratcliff Road of London River, but mention St. Pauli and all hands will agree, in words strong and fervent, that it is the best of them all. Take Coney Island, several country fairs, a Continental kermess or two, pour them together and stir furiously, and the result will be something like St. Pauli, that happy haven of sailor-men weary of the sea. It may be entered by way of the Schlachterstrasse from Hamburg, along streets swarming with hucksters and costermongers selling smoked fish, sweetmeats, penny novelettes, flowers, pictures, and other trumpery wares among which the seafarer lingers to buy a gift for the sweetheart left in the last port.

Hamburg Harbor makes its appeal en masse, as a pageant.—Page 452.

Neither Dutch nor Venetian, but with a flavor of both.—Page 455.

Thence he must run the gauntlet of the Judenbörse, or Jews' Exchange, a street market in which are collected all the discarded odds and ends of things that have been accumulating since the beginning of time, hardware, clothing, fish-nets, old books, shoes, jewelry, and so on. This quarter fascinates the mariner and on any pleasant afternoon he may be seen bargaining among a horde of gesticulating vendors for wholly useless rubbish which chances to catch his errant fancy. I know no more innocently diverting sight than that of a stalwart boatswain or quarter-master drifting toward St. Pauli, a battered bird cage dangling from one fist, a tarnished picture frame clutched in the other, and a bunch of German posies flaunting in his button-hole.

St. Pauli is the playground of the honest working people of Hamburg, a spacious, harmless place of concert halls and restaurants, theatres and beer gardens, of moving picture shows, wax-works, and shooting galleries, carousels, and booths of infinite variety. The crowds which seek amusement here find a certain childish zest in simple things. In this the Germans are remarkably like that other nation, the Japanese, whose industrial and military expansion, by land and sea, has been likewise notable. And St. Pauli chiefly interests the visitor because of its contrasts and seeming incongruity. Near at hand it is possible to catch glimpses of the harbor, to feel the thrill of its dynamic activities, and to discern the commerce-crowded shores. It appears as if Hamburg must be so strenuously at work that it can find no time for play.

Yet here in St. Pauli are thousands of happy, leisurely townsfolk, and groups of care-free sailors arm-in-arm, and rosy, boyish soldiers not nearly so ferocious of aspect as England imagines them to be, all enjoying themselves as if the world-conquering destiny of the Fatherland was the least of their concerns. The English masses in the great cities have lost this spirit of play, or perhaps it has been crushed out of them. It is the charm of Hamburg, whether you mingle with the populace at St. Pauli or prefer the more exclusive region of the Alster, that the day's work is brightened by a kind of sane contentment in living, of satisfaction in honest endeavor and of simple-hearted pleasure in the leisure hours.

The bank of the Elbe at Blankensee, below Hamburg.

LIFE

By Margaret Sherwood

How the great wheel rolls on the long white way
I marvelled, gazing far, as all men must;
One called unseen, and I, who dared not stay,
Am now become the wheel along the dust.

Drawn by James Montgomery Flagg.

As he stood looking down on Mr. Clapp, he allowed one eyelid to flicker.—Page 464.

JUSTIFICATION

By Gordon Hall Gerould

ILLUSTRATIONS BY JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG

HE reputation of Peter Sanders, as he himself bitterly surmised, was infamous. He was not in the way of knowing, to be sure, how many preachers, within the past four years, had taken his nefarious career to point the moral of sermons; and he suspected only vaguely that he was held in admiring dishonor, east and west, as the boldest and wickedest gambler in America. Had he read the newspapers, which he did but seldom, he might have been aware of the number of lives he had blasted. As it was, his long-cultivated distaste for the meaningless scurry of current events had grown to a violent repugnance through seeing his name vilified in the public prints. He knew that he was a pariah; and that was more than enough, for he loved the society of his kind.

He had been hounded from his own house by an over-active district attorney; he had been compelled to quit business operations at all points and to content himself with the modest fortune (not more than a million and a half of productive investments, as he reflected morosely) that he had acquired. He was in the prime of life still, and he resented his enforced inactivity. He realized that only the forbearance, the very politic forbearance, of the officers of the law, who preferred to stop a public scandal quietly rather than probe it in the view of the world, stood between himself and a term of years with shaven head and striped clothing. He was not grateful, however. He regarded himself as the victim of stupid laws; and he cursed the district attorney as a loud-mouthed, hypocritical tyrant, serving up the head of a peaceable man of business to please young Democracy, who danced with mincing steps but was not a very proper young person, after all.

Worse than his retirement from affairs was his exile. If he could have lived, even solitary, in his own house, life would have been supportable. There he had rows upon rows of books, two great rooms full of them, which he had gathered with industry and intelligence through the years. He had read them, too, as time permitted, intending, as soon as he should be released from business cares, to follow up certain lines of antiquarian research that interested him extremely. He had intended to find out all that could be learned of one or two obscure mediæval figures whom he had stumbled upon: Walter Map of Oxford, for example, and a very shadowy person called Goliardus. Their temper suited him. He had gathered books to these ends as well as for rarity and beauty of workmanship; and he had eked out the inadequacy of his early training in Latin by pretty steady reading of the classics, particularly, in these later years, of the satirists, whom he had come to love. Now, in his leisure enforced, he would have been very glad to spend his days among his books, with no living companionship save of a few trusted friends who for old time's sake would not have minded the loneliness of the once feverishly gay house. They would have made nothing of his passion for the Middle Ages, to be sure, but they would have formed a charming circle, full of reminiscence and yet tactful of reference, for a quiet bachelor dinner.

But the books stood gathering dust on the shelves, and the friends could not meet. Mr. Sanders had received the most positive assurances from the district attorney that any move to occupy the house during his term of office would be regarded as a breach of the truce. Prosecution would begin at once; and the end of a trial, as the laws stood, was not doubtful. So the house had remained empty since the day it had been closed as what the preachers amiably called a "gambling hell." Mr. Sanders was an exile from home. Moreover, he did not dare take another house, either in New York or in any other large town, for that would at once have aroused suspicion and subjected him to annoyance. Hotels were impossible. The reporters gathered like bees as soon as he registered his name, and no management, he well knew, would regard him with favor as a permanent guest in any set of rooms large enough to suit his exacting tastes. He might have bought a place in the country, to be sure, but he would have had to live in it quite alone. By his soberer neighbors he would have been shunned, while any entertainment of gilded youth or giddy seniors would probably have resulted in a "raid." The prospect was not alluring.

Life at home was impracticable; life abroad proved impossible. He could buy books, and he did so, but he could ship them only to a storage warehouse. Save for his faithful Henry, a personal attendant of tried devotion, he was without companionship. Besides, though he might be an outcast, some simplicity of heart made him abhor the thought of being an expatriate. At Monte Carlo he had been surprised by a couple of his compatriots while repeating audibly:

"Lives there a man with soul so dead—"

Evidently they had recognized the mephistophelian Sanders, for they sniggered as they passed.

That unfortunate encounter had been the end. He determined to break from his isolation, to go where he would be unknown, and to be himself rather than a figure of public scorn. Three weeks later, at the Twenty-third Street Ferry in New York, he changed his name from Peter Sanders to Paul Silcox. The identity of initials was a happy thought of Henry's to avoid the necessity of purchasing new trunks. Sufficiently provided with funds for the needs of many months, and accompanied always by Henry, he entered a stateroom on a south-bound express and arrived the following night at an unfashionable town in the heart of Florida, a free but suspicious man.

In Orlando the newly arrived Mr. Silcox soon found himself a figure of importance, but not of notoriety. As the occupant of the best rooms in a well-conducted, quiet hotel and the only resident of the hostelry with a man-servant, he became the centre of interest for the gregarious circle of guests. By his unassuming affability he promptly won their liking and gained their confidence. Persons of simple tastes and ample but not extraordinary incomes, who for reasons of health or idleness had sought this region of orange groves and lakes among the pines, they regarded the newcomer as a most satisfactory addition to their number. They even boasted a little about him to their acquaintances in other small hotels that had no guest with a man-servant. To drivers of motor-cars and other purveyors of comfort Henry gave out discreetly that his master was a New Yorker, who had been in the banking business and had retired early in pursuance of his desire for cultivated leisure. Mr. Silcox, reserved but never taciturn, filled without difficulty the part created for him by his valet. It required little acting. Within a fortnight he basked in the sunshine of popularity and esteem. He had enjoyed a confidential chat with the mayor of the town, and, as a Northerner of wealth, he had been offered the chance to buy two orange groves.

One sunlit morning in mid-January Mr. Silcox was sitting on the eastern veranda of the hotel, reading Juvenal and making mordant reflections upon life.

"They're a pack of fools," he murmured inaudibly, "and I'm a bigger fool than any of them. They would cry with fright, I suppose, if they knew that Peter Sanders was about, damn them! But they're a good sort. I like them, yes; and they treat Paul Silcox just as well as they would a successful manufacturer of chewing-gum. They're nice people, and it's a shame to take them in. But I'm just the same, whether I'm Paul Silcox or not. I'm perfectly fit for Sunday-school, and I always knew it. It's nothing but damnable hypocrisy that got me into trouble. Hypocrisy!"

He gazed across a stretch of dusty grass to a thicket of palmetto trees, pursing up his heavy lips to relieve the agitation of his mind. Except for this slight movement, he presented a figure of somnolent ease as he thrust out his fat legs from the depths of a gayly cushioned willow chair. His flannels of spotless white gave no better evidence, one would have said, as to the care bestowed on his body, than his round, well-shaven face to a conscience free from reproach. What lurked behind the drooping eyelids no observer could well have made out, save that a sudden light sometimes flashed there. He lifted his eyes now, momentarily, as he heard steps behind him.

"Ah, good-morning, Mr. Silcox, good-morning. I trust that we're not intruding."

At the greeting Mr. Silcox turned his head and made the preliminary wriggle essential to quitting his deep chair. "Good-morning, Dr. Henderson, good—" he began at the same instant.

"Don't, I beg of you, don't rise," said the elderly clergyman, who now stood with out-stretched hand in front of the chair. "Don't let us disturb you, don't. Eh—allow me to introduce to you my friend Mr. Clapp, Mr. Silcox." He indicated by a slight turn of the head a tall young man in blue serge who stood beside him.

Mr. Silcox shook hands gravely with Dr. Henderson, who was said to be the rector of a large church in New England, now enjoying a midwinter holiday to prepare himself for the severe labors of the Lenten season; and he transferred his hand uncomplainingly to the strong grasp of his new acquaintance.

"Very glad to meet you, Mr. Clapp," he said cordially. "A warm morning, Doctor! I've been too languid to stir. Do sit down, both of you. Let me pull up some chairs."

With a desperate struggle he got on his legs, only to find that the young man was already placing two chairs beside his own. Not to be unemployed, and pathetically grateful for company, as always, he suggested that lemonade would be refreshing.

"You are very kind, very kind," responded Dr. Henderson; "that would indeed be delightful."

"Thanks very much," said young Mr. Clapp, fanning himself with his straw hat and brushing back his curly light hair with his hand.

"Pardon me for one moment," said Mr. Silcox. "I'll just step in and speak to my man."

Mr. Clapp looked inquiringly after their host as he disappeared. "Have you known Mr.—Mr. Silcox long, uncle?" he asked.

"Oh—ah, I met him last week, last week, Gresham. Why do you inquire?"

"Oh, pure habit. Looks a bit like a fellow I used to know," remarked the young man, eying with some surprise the copy of Juvenal on the arm of Mr. Silcox's chair. Queer likeness, that's all."

"Not an uncommon type of face," remarked the clergyman, "but a very delightful and intelligent gentleman. Mr. Silcox has lived much abroad, he tells me. Most of us have—eh—forgotten our classics."

At this point their host returned, and all three seated themselves to await the arrival of the lemonade.

"Mr. Clapp," explained Dr. Henderson, "is the son of an old and very dear friend of mine, Jonas Clapp, of Chicago. You may have met him in the—eh—business world? In any case, you will know his name as a merchant prince. A wonderful man, Mr. Silcox, 'not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.'"

"Oh, come, Uncle Joseph!" interrupted Gresham Clapp, fidgeting slightly with the discomfort of the young at hearing their parents taken seriously. "Dad's all right, but he's no Bible character."

"My dear Gresham," returned Dr. Henderson in mild reproof, "perhaps I am quite as good a judge of that as you: I have, presumably, a closer acquaintance with the Word of God, and I knew your father a long while before you were born."

Young Mr. Clapp burst into a generous laugh, in which Mr. Silcox joined tentatively. The conversation seemed likely to stray into regions whither he seldom had ventured.

"Your father's name is, of course, perfectly familiar to me, sir," he began, "and——"

"It would be fairly hard to get into Chicago without seeing it," said the young man, still smiling.

"A most remarkable extension of business, most remarkable!" murmured the clergyman. "Mr. Clapp," he went on, turning to Mr. Silcox, "arrived only this morning, and was good enough to come to see me at once. He tells me that he has been exploring the Everglades, and he has stopped at Orlando on his way northward to look after certain business interests for his father."

"Oh, nothing important!" protested the new arrival. "Just a few things that Son couldn't possibly go wrong in, you know."

"Did you find the Everglades an interesting region?" asked Mr. Silcox politely. "Ah, the—lemonade."

Henry, imperturbable and seemingly oblivious to everything but the dexterous management of a small silver tray, served Dr. Henderson first. As he stood looking down on Mr. Clapp, he allowed one eyelid to flicker. He glanced hurriedly at his master and resumed his stolidity of expression without delay. Beatific content overspread Mr. Silcox's face. Gresham Clapp, on his part, appeared to find something in the servant's masked features that interested him. From the moment of Henry's approach, he watched the man's automatic movements as if fascinated.

"Jove! but it's good to look at a civilized servant again," he remarked, as if to justify his perhaps observable interest, when Henry had withdrawn beyond earshot. "The hotels where I've been staying—well, their notion of elegance was to keep the chickens out of the dining-room during meal hours."

The talk thereupon drifted into harmless comment upon the deficiencies of hostelries in various parts of the world. Dr. Henderson knew the politer sections of Europe and the regions beloved of pleasure-seekers, north and south; Gresham Clapp had roughed it for a year in the West; while Mr. Silcox contributed eclectic information gathered at home and abroad. He forgot to be cynical in his enjoyment of the oddly sorted friends. To the open-hearted breeziness of the younger man he responded with a gayety that was wholly delightful. Never before, it seemed to him, had he met a youth of this type, at least not on the same terms. Possibly, he reflected in a submerged train of thought that kept pace with the actual conversation, he had been too warily critical of the youngsters who came to his house in the old days. But they had seemed to him, and they seemed to him still, a pack of brainless idiots whose money would be better placed anywhere than in their own pockets. This Clapp was different: straight of mind as of figure, sensitive to the impacts of life clearly enough, and capable of defending his own. Mr. Silcox was a little amused by his sudden impulse to friendliness, but he was by no means inclined to resist it.

He was surprised at the swift approach of the luncheon-hour, and he gladly forsook his solitary table in order to continue his conversation with Mr. Clapp, who was staying on with Dr. Henderson till afternoon. Luncheon ended, they joined a group of ladies and gentlemen who were paying a leisurely visit to a young and anæmic alligator in a basin across the stretch of lawn. Mr. Silcox relapsed for a moment into the mood habitual with him when he noted that every one not already known to every one else was delighted, or at least pleased, to make the acquaintance; but he pulled himself up with the reflection that he himself liked to be absorbed thus in the company. He noted also that the consideration paid to Gresham Clapp seemed to be due quite as much to his sponsors as to his youthful charm. And he himself, Peter Sanders really, was treated with the same deference as Dr. Henderson.

A delicate reference to the boy's much-advertised father started the conversation in familiar channels as they returned to the veranda. The entire circle seemed to have become fast friends, and they forsook reserve. They chattered trivially of important things, importantly of trivial things—talk in which the amiable Mr. Silcox's soul delighted, even while it revolted him. For the sake of being one with them he could equably endure the descent into empty-headed dulness, which they appeared to love. To be warmed by their appreciative esteem he would huddle with them in the hovels of gossip. They were, after all, the world. Before young Mr. Clapp's departure to go about his business, Mr. Silcox had invited him, along with Dr. Henderson, to make an expedition on the following day to the renowned sulphur springs.

"Henry," he said later, while preparing for his early dinner, "I want you to go over to Smith's and order a motor for me at half-past nine to-morrow morning. I'm taking a couple of friends with me to the sulphur springs they talk so much about, and we shall be gone for lunch, so please have some baskets of things ready."

"Yes, sir. But—beg pardon for my asking, Mr. Sanders——"

"Silcox! Silcox! Henry. Do be careful."

"Mr. Silcox, I beg pardon, sir. But do you mind my asking if they are the gentlemen that were with you this morning, sir?"

"Why, yes, as a matter of fact, they are. But what of that? Didn't you like their looks, Henry? Eminently respectable gentlemen, I assure you, who won't corrupt my morals."

"But—look here, Mr. Clapp, I'm going to trust your discretion and tell you something."—Page 469.

"Only, sir, I think I've seen the younger gentleman before; and you know that I remember faces, Mr.—Silcox."

"I know you do. You've a lynx's eye, Henry. But what's the harm in seeing a man twice?"

"It isn't twice, sir," said Henry earnestly, pausing as he folded a white flannel coat with elaborate precision. "I've seen this gentleman several times, and I think it was in your—you understand—in your house. I hope you'll be careful, sir."

"That's nonsense, all nonsense. You've got the idea on your brain that I'm known everywhere, and you're nervous about it. We both are, for that matter. But this is a very different place from Palm Beach. We're quite safe here. There's not one chance in a thousand of these people connecting me with Peter Sanders. As for Mr. Clapp, he's not a young fool from Fifth Avenue, but a busy young chap from Chicago who knows the Rockies better than Broadway."

"Very good, sir," said Henry in the most subdued of tones, "but I hope you'll keep an eye on him all the same."

Mr. Silcox laughed amiably. He knew the depth of his attendant's devotion: it was his closest tie with humanity. He felt a genuine affection for the man, and he never resented being fussed over. But Henry was sometimes absurd.

"I'll look out for myself," he said as he left the room.

In the cool quiet of the next morning, while the freshness of the night was still perceptible in the sun's heat, he waited with Dr. Henderson before a blazing fire in the hotel office.

"I trust that Gresham won't be late," fumed the clergyman gently. "Young people are so careless about time—so careless!"

"Oh, I'll bank on Mr. Clapp, and anyhow we've a long day before us," remarked Mr. Silcox calmly.

"Yes, Gresham may be trusted to do whatever he puts his mind on," agreed Dr Henderson. "Though he was unsuccessful in his collegiate career, which was a great trial to his family, he has his father's incisive character. A very remarkable man, Mr. Silcox, very remarkable, who has been, I may say, greatly calumniated."

The whir of the motor and the entrance of young Gresham, fresh-faced and shining-eyed, were simultaneous.

"Just in the nick of time!" he exclaimed, shaking hands heartily with the two gentlemen. "A grand day, isn't it? Nothing like it in January this side of Montreal."

Outside, they found Henry stowing away capacious hampers in a rakish touring-car. It was part of his infallibility to provide the last refinements of civilization from nothing at all. In excellent humor they said good-bye to an interested knot of idlers, ladies with the novels and the silken bags that represented their mental resources against dulness, gentlemen with cigars. Out through streets of slatternly houses and along a dusty road that soon darted into the cover of pines they drove at good speed. The larger orange groves, resplendent masses of rich green spotted with the high lights of golden fruit, were soon left behind. Now and again they skirted a blue lake set in white sand; infrequently they roused a desolate village or passed an orange grove that had strayed from its kind. For the most part they were among the pines, or speeding across undulating wilds stripped of trees but not devoid of the fascination luminous air gives to desert spaces. When the day grew hot, they turned from the main road and followed devious trails that led, ill-marked and unmade, into the depths of the forest, where flowers of strange tints grew in ragged clusters and the branches were festooned with moss. At a seemingly perilous rate of speed they twisted their way among the trunks of trees, dashed to the bottom of little gullies, and passed noiselessly across levels carpeted with the cinnamon brown of pine-needles.

"A marvellous country—quite marvellous!" ejaculated Dr. Henderson as they drove through a semi-tropical jungle that gave the effect of a stage picture and emerged on the bank of a crystalline pool surrounded with lofty trees.

"But not a patch on the Everglades," declared Gresham Clapp with conviction.

"I had pictured them as huge swamps, beautiful only to a mosquito," commented Mr. Silcox.

"Not a bit of that," said his young friend. "Oh, of course, there are insects; but it's mighty pretty down there, and it's going to be the great orange-growing country."

"Ah, I hadn't suspected that," said Mr. Silcox, feeling a genuine interest in his guest's enthusiasm at least, if not in the great marshes. The youth of Fifth Avenue, as he remembered them, were eager only to squander their allowances. This boy gave him a vicarious attachment to the forces that were developing the earth, not plundering it.

"Your father has—eh—investments in the Everglades, has he not, Gresham?" inquired Dr. Henderson.

"He's put in a little money," answered the young man; and he went on with what seemed to be a shade of disgust in his voice: "He'll never sink much anywhere unless he's in a position to run the show. But I'm planning a little haul of my own down there."

While they ate a really excellent luncheon on a wooden platform above the spring, while they drifted in a rude skiff down the stream that emerged, the color of turquoise, from the bubbling pool, Mr. Silcox had no difficulty in drawing Gresham out. Much of the way home he made him talk. He was taken with his new friend, who responded with candor to every advance. Dr. Henderson fell silent, except for occasional heavy comment. Mr. Silcox learned that Mr. Clapp, with the adventurous spirit of his race, was planning to develop a considerable tract for orange-growing in a fertile paradise where frost never came and the scale was unknown. He learned, too, that the boy's father refused to support him in his magnificent enterprise, declaring, so the son said, that he already had sunk enough money in the swamps. Single-handed and with perfectly inadequate capital, but optimistic and energetic like all budding financiers, the heir of the Clapp millions was preparing his own coup. Mr. Silcox found himself regretting that he could not take a hand in this exciting game, that circumstances would prevent him even from investing money in it. Silently he cursed the district attorney.

They parted in the late afternoon, the best of friends. Gresham Clapp's business in Orlando, he informed the others, would take him a week's time at least. During the following days, morning, afternoon, and evening, whenever he was not busy with orange-growers and orange-packers, he drifted into the hotel. He took his friends to see how the fruit was cultivated, washed, and shipped. He let fall much interesting information about the conditions of raising and marketing oranges. More and more to the exclusion of Dr. Henderson, as the days passed, he was in the company of Mr. Silcox. He was not so discourteous as forever to be talking of his business schemes; he contributed entertainingly to any conversation, and he knew how to listen. In his breezy way he was always respectful to the older man. He asked advice very freely; he spoke of his difficulties with the utmost frankness, though he laughed at caution and blew care to the winds.

Drawn by James Montgomery Flagg.

"He's just about broken me—I mean, my heart."—Page 471.

Day by day Mr. Silcox's pleasure in the young man's society increased, and with it his interest in orange-growing. Occasionally, when alone in his rooms, he saw the humorous aspect of the situation and laughed at himself rather bitterly for caring so absurdly about the cultivation of oranges. The speedy and sure returns of the roulette wheel were more in his line than the slower bounties of the earth. He put it to himself in this way, whenever he thought of the matter at all, not reflecting that his attitude toward Gresham Clapp was the really remarkable factor in the case. Something like an intimacy had sprung up between the two men despite the disparity in their years and the veil that Mr. Silcox must, of necessity, hang across his own past. From a purely generous motive he regretted the necessity. His heart expanded under the influence of his friend's youthful charm, glowed with a warmth unknown to it for years. At length it had found the human relationship that it had craved.

Mr. Silcox was conscious of wishing to make as much of this as possible, to make it a part of his life. He found himself desirous of becoming a proper associate for young Gresham, and he was astonished. He was willing to pay any price to grapple his friend to him, even to sacrifice opinions and prejudices—even about himself and his career. He rejoiced in the companionship of an unspoiled heart. He wished, moreover, to express his gratitude in some tangible form; he schemed incessantly to fill the young man's hours of leisure with delight. He wanted no return for what he gave—the recompense had come before the benefit, indeed. But he was glad to receive the homage of unaffected comradeship, always so flattering a tribute to middle-age from youth.

For the first time in his sensational career, the conscience of Peter Sanders awoke. Might it not be something more than public hypocrisy that kept him from dealing straightforwardly with this honest youth? Would he care to tell Gresham Clapp that he was Peter Sanders, the notorious gambler? If not, there must be something wrong in the whole business, for obviously his friend took no opinions ready made, and was not prudishly sensitive about the wagging tongue of rumor. But here he was, as Paul Silcox, quite unable to help a man he liked, and at the same time enter upon a business venture of certain profit, simply because he could not bear to disclose his identity to the most charitable and generous of beings. He felt himself bound hand and foot by his own folly. He recalled apothegms he had read about sin's nasty way of recoiling upon its perpetrator. He grew savage with the faithful Henry, who represented his past, and rebuked him severely one night for venturing to renew his warning about Mr. Clapp. Mr. Clapp, it must be understood, was not of their kind: he didn't have to skulk. Henry was wounded, and set his face grimly.

Mr. Silcox had found no peace of mind when, one morning, he sat with the young man on a bench beside the little lake overlooked by the hotel. It was Gresham Clapp's last day in the South; he planned to take the midnight express for Jacksonville and Chicago. They were talking in a desultory fashion about oranges.

"Would it be impertinent of me to ask how much you need to put through your deal?" inquired Paul Silcox hesitatingly. "I—eh—might be able to find some one interested in the proposition, you know."

"Not a bit of it," replied his friend promptly. "I need, with what I've got, just ten thousand. Why don't you come in yourself, Mr. Silcox?" He laughed in a way that would make it easy to turn off the matter as a joke.

"I—I should be very glad to do so," faltered Mr. Silcox, with great earnestness, "were it possible. As my affairs stand, it would be difficult to arrange, that's all."

"Oh, please don't think of it," begged the youth. "I wasn't asking you for the money. Business is one thing, and friendship's another. You've been awfully kind to me. I must tell you that before I leave."

"The pleasure has been mine, I assure you," deprecated Mr. Silcox with sincerity. "But—look here, Mr. Clapp, I'm going to trust your discretion and tell you something. Do what you please with it. My name isn't Paul Silcox at all. I'm—I'm Peter Sanders. Yes," he went on, noticing his companion's involuntary start, "the notorious Peter Sanders. I don't suppose you could bear to have anything to do with such a rogue as the newspapers say I am, but I'd like to lend you ten thousand with everything understood."

He finished his explanation rather wistfully, and looked straight at the young man, who flushed to the roots of his hair.

"Why, Mr.—Silcox," said Gresham Clapp, pausing as if to deliberate on his words, "I don't know that it makes any difference who you are, I mean whether you are Mr. Silcox or Mr. Sanders. I see, of course, why you prefer not to use your own name here. Uncle Joseph would cut you dead, if he knew he knew you, or preach to you, which would be worse." He chuckled, despite his embarrassment.

"It's very good of you to say so, that is, to say it doesn't matter," returned Peter Sanders. "I appreciate it, and I know I can trust you."

"No, you can be sure that I'll never tell," said the young man, whose composure had returned. "But—excuse me—don't you find life here a bit dull?"

"I hadn't thought of it," answered his companion simply enough. "I—I find I like the people."

Gresham Clapp eyed his companion curiously. "It's queer," he said, "but I believe I understand it."

"If you do," queried Mr. Sanders, "won't you let me invest with you? Of course, I've never lived under a false name till I came here, and I should have to give you a draft on my bankers in New York."

"You're sure you want to do it?"

"Yes, quite sure," was the answer, "both for business and for personal reasons."

"I'd rather have you do it just for business," remarked his friend gravely.

"Well, it's strictly business, then," said Peter Sanders, smiling at last. "Will you come up to my room to arrange about it?"

Three-quarters of an hour later, Gresham Clapp left the hotel with the equivalent of ten thousand dollars in his pocket. He had said good-bye to Mr. Silcox, for it was agreed that convenience would be better served if they did not again meet in public. Peter Sanders sat alone, ruminating. His heart was full. His bitterness was turned, for the moment, into genuine satisfaction. No longer did he feel himself an outcast, wronged, oppressed, down-trodden by a smugly righteous world. He had made his way with an honest man. None of his investments had ever interested him like this, nor had he ever felt the same excitement over any venture. He virtually begged Henry's pardon when Henry next came to him, and he nearly moved the imperturbable servant to tears by his extraordinary kindness. All day long, he went about in this exalted state of mind.

Though his companions of the hotel were unaware of it, the real Peter Sanders had experienced a change of heart. His amiability toward them came no longer from mere good-nature and a craving for the society of beings who should take him at his own valuation. He cherished their respectability and his part in it for its own sake. He would have liked to make a clean confession of his sins before them all, and to be absolved at whatever cost of penitential suffering. Only a lurking sense that his transgressions against the code of these good people were too great to be forgiven without the sacrifice of esteem, withheld him from telling the whole story to Dr. Henderson at least. He chided himself as a moral coward, but he shivered at the possibility of receiving forgiveness mingled with condescension from a righteous man who had treated him as if he had no past. He recognized himself as a leper, but he shrank from crying, "Unclean, unclean!" It would cut him off from what his heart craved, and it was quite unnecessary.

Whatever he had done (and perhaps the district attorney was right in thinking his establishment in New York a menace), he was doing no harm to any one now. He had even succeeded, once at least, in doing positive good. To be sure, he had in that case revealed his identity, but he could not be sure of finding elsewhere such philosophical acceptance of himself at his real worth. He recalled an admonition of his young friend's, just before they said goodbye: "Don't, for Heaven's sake, let on to Uncle Joseph." And he was silent.

At the same time, the world took on a new aspect for Peter Sanders by reason of his encounter with honest Gresham Clapp, who was clean-souled without mounting the seat of judgment. He felt more assurance in his rôle of Mr. Silcox, now that he had proved himself in the sight of another man to have the essential qualities of the part. He came to feel also, as the days passed, that he was not skulking, but had buried his infamy forever. He enjoyed the sunlight as he had not done before; he relished a rubber of bridge after dinner with a fussy old lady in a white shawl as partner, and no stakes. The Roman satirists he neglected, and he read Montaigne with delight.

One morning, a week after Gresham Clapp's departure, he sat on the veranda with Dr. Henderson.

"I wonder that I have—ah—heard nothing from our friend Gresham," remarked the latter. "You have, I suppose, as yet had no word from him? He certainly should have sent you some acknowledgment of your kindness. For one of his years, he is so singularly thoughtful for others that I should have supposed— He is, indeed, greatly like his father."

"Oh, that's all right," returned Mr. Silcox easily. "There's no reason why he should write to me at once, and probably he'll send you a note soon. I should be very glad to hear."

"Ah!" exclaimed Dr. Henderson, "I see that the boy is bringing the morning post now. If you will allow me, I will see whether he has letters for us."

Two minutes later he returned, reading one letter and bearing another unopened.

"Our young friend has remembered us at the same time," he said with a smile. "He seems to be quite himself, quite, though he writes briefly."

"Thank you," said Mr. Silcox, taking the proffered letter, his face illuminated with gratification. He tore it open and hurriedly glanced it through. "Yes, quite himself," he echoed, without change of expression. "We will—talk about it later. Will you excuse me now? I have some things that must be attended to before lunch."

With nervous step he went to his sitting-room, wondering dully whether he could support himself all the way. He felt cold, as if death were upon him. He dropped heavily into a lounging-chair.

"Henry," he called to his attentive servant, "some whiskey! Pour it—please."

He gulped down the liquor with closed eyes. "Go!" he said.

With an effort, he opened the letter and spread it before him. Slowly and painfully, stabbed by every word, he read it.

"Dear Mr. Sanders:

"It may interest you to know that our meeting in Orlando was not the first occasion on which I had the pleasure of your society. The winter before they closed you up, I visited your place in New York several times, and I dropped a straight ten thousand. I had to tell dad, and he has never forgiven me. He swore I shouldn't go into the business or have a cent more than enough to live on till I'd earned that amount for myself. When I met you, I realized who you were at once, and I made up my mind I'd get it out of you. I played you, and I won. After you were so nice to me, I thought that I couldn't ask you for the money, but I sat tight. You offered it to me, you remember. Uncle Joseph, I suppose, would call the whole business a low trick. But you're a good sport and ought to admit that it was a fair game. After all, I haven't done you as badly as you did me. I'm sending you under another cover a transfer of the property in the Everglades, which may be worth something. I hope you'll like orange-raising! Tell Uncle Joseph if you want to, but I don't believe it would do you any good. I sha'n't tell dad.

"Thanking you very sincerely for the good times you gave me and the ten thousand, "Yours truly,

"Gresham Clapp."

"Henry!" called Mr. Silcox huskily.

"Yes, sir—what is it, sir?" said Henry anxiously, appearing from the next room.

"Henry, I wanted to tell you—" Mr. Silcox gasped with the effort of speech. All the color had left his cheeks, and only his lifted eyelids gave expression to his face. "You were quite right about that gentleman, Mr. Clapp, you know. We had met before. It has cost me about ten thousand to find that out. He's like the whole rotten lot of them, and he's just about broken me—I mean, my heart. You're the only man living who knows I have one, so I'd like you to know."

"I'm very sorry to hear it, Mr. Sanders," said the man, unrebuked. "I seldom do forget a face. I wish I could make it up to you, sir, I really do. Perhaps a little more whiskey before lunch, sir?"

Mr. Silcox made no answer, but sipped the glass that was placed at his elbow. For a long while he sat in deep thought.

SONGS OF A SYRIAN LOVER

By Clinton Scollard

I

WHEN all the sands of night are run,
  And dim the stars by slow degrees,
When over Tabor mounts the sun
  And gilds with gold my olive trees,—

When skimming swallows dart and wheel
  Athwart the azure Syrian air,
Somehow at heart I do not feel
  'Tis morning if she be not there!

II

I HAVE stood on Jebel Sannin looking toward the tideless sea;
I have marched to Kerak Moab from the glades of Galilee;
I have trod the gorge of Petra where the ancient wonders be.

I have rested by the waters rilling clear from Ras-el-Ain;
I have lingered where the sunrise sweeps the width of Amir's plain;
I have seen o'er Merom's marshes ride the white wraith of the rain.

I have watched the pink flamingoes where old Nilus' torrents pour,
But give me, at shut of twilight, when all wanderings are o'er
And the vesper star is lighted, just her fair face at the door!

III

WHERE Richard Cœur de Lion shone
In the red lists of Ascalon
  The lizard slips from stone to stone;
Templars and turbaned hosts are gone
  Like sands from off the sea-dunes blown.

I know that I may one day be
E'en as a sand-grain of the sea
  By the rude tempests tossed and swirled,
Yet something says my memory
  Will bear her beauty down the world.

GENERAL GRANT'S LETTERS TO GENERAL BEALE

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THESE letters were written by Grant to his friend General Edward F. Beale at intervals from 1877, when Grant left Washington and went upon his travels, down to 1885; the last, indeed, was penned within a few weeks of the heroic end of the great commander at Mount McGregor.

The letters are the living memorial of a friendship which began in California in the early fifties and which twenty years later had a marked influence upon the course of national affairs. Grant had the gift of friendship, and his circle was not small; but to the Washington of the seventies it was no secret that of all his personal friends the one he most admired, the one to whom he always listened (and then did as his own good sense dictated) was "Ned" Beale (a grandson of the gallant Truxtun), who with Stockton conquered California, who fought Kearny's guns in the desperate battle of San Pasqual, who gave up active service in the Civil War at Lincoln's request because the providential President knew that Beale's presence in the debatable State would preserve it to the Union. Beale related that he first saw Grant in 1848 in the Casino on the Plaza of the City of Mexico where the officers used to gather during the American occupation. Beale was on his famous ride across Mexico, bringing the news of the conquest of California and the first specimens of the gold that had been newly discovered. He stopped for a few hours to change horses on his route to Vera Cruz. The friendship of Grant and Beale, however, dates from 1853, when Grant's army career seemed closed, and Beale, having resigned from the navy that he might provide for his growing family, was becoming interested in the wonderful development of the Golden State, which he foresaw like a prophet and by which he profited like a wise man.

In these days, when Grant was unfortunate, Beale stood by his friend with both word and deed. They walked the Long Wharf together and ate their meals at the "What Cheer" House when San Francisco was as uncertain of its name as of its future.

The value of these letters is enhanced by the fact that Grant was a reserved man and a somewhat reluctant correspondent; to few if to any of his circle of intimates did he open his heart as he did to his old comrade and house-friend Beale. The originals of these letters are in the possession of Hon. Truxtun Beale, only son of the General and former United States Minister to Persia and to Greece, to whom we are indebted for permission to reproduce them here.—STEPHEN BONSAL.

INVERNESS, September 9th, '77.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I was delighted day before yesterday while visiting the very northernmost part of Scotland by receiving your very acceptable favor of the 15th of August. We have had a most delightful visit both in England and Scotland, and on the Continent. We will remain on this island until about the 20th of October when we will go to Paris to remain some time. If the money holds out—it depends very much on Consolidated Va. Silver Mining stock holding out—I will be able to stay abroad two years very pleasantly.

It has been very gratifying to me—though very irksome to one so little inclined to speaking—to see our country so respected as it is abroad, and all the people, of all classes, show it on all occasions. The demonstrations on all the lines of railway, when the trains stop, are very much like they were immediately after the close of the rebellion, in the Northern States, when any of the army officers who were in high favor were travelling. But the newspapers bore you enough with this subject without my inflicting anything further.

Travelling as I have I have not been very well able to keep up with affairs at home. Important matters like the great railroad strike are fully reported—and duly exaggerated, of course—but little details I do not see as I would if receiving our own papers regularly. The progress of Civil Service reform—a very flexible reform, or humbug, that justifies whatever a few dissatisfied politicians want—comes by instalments. There are two humbugs which Mr. Hayes will find out—for I believe he is an honest, sincere man, and patriot—one is Civil Service reform, the other reformers. This is my judgment. Let us see.

Soon after my arrival in England I had the pleasure of driving Kellogg. He came over in fine condition and is as good as ever. I hope Rockey [one of his horses] may prove as good and that either Mrs. Beale or yourself will find enjoyment in using him. I left word before my departure that if Blossom was not in foal you could use her—on the turf or otherwise—as you choose. I will feel more at home back in Washington than any place else, and no place more than in visiting your farm with you. I also thank you and Mrs. Beale—Mrs. Grant joins me in this—for your kind invitation to your house. If we should conclude to remain there we will, of course, endeavor to have a house of our own. But we thank you all the same.

With kindest regards of Mrs. Grant and myself to Mrs. Beale and all your family, I am, sincerely and truly,

Your obt. svt.,

U. S. GRANT.

HOTEL BRISTOL, PARIS, November 4th, '77.

DEAR GENERAL: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 19th of Oct. I want you to do with "Bob Acres" just as you would if he was your own. Breed him to just as many mares as you think proper. If I should ever want him I will send for him. It is most likely that when I settle down I shall want a pair to drive, and if he proves fast may want him. In the meantime there will be an opportunity of seeing his colts.

We have been now ten days in Paris, and I have seen pretty well the outside of it. But I have seen nothing here that would make we want to live in Paris, or elsewhere outside of the United States. My preference would be for England of all the countries abroad I have yet seen. It has been a mystery to me how so many Americans can content themselves here, year after year with nothing to do. Houses are not so comfortable as with us; living is not so good; society is confined—almost—to the colony temporarily residing here, and the only thing I see to commend Paris to foreigners is that everybody minds their own business and do not interfere with their neighbors—if they pay their bills. We have seen Mamie * and have promised to dine with her and husband, quietly, if we get through other engagements in time, before leaving. She is very well and appears very contented—I note what you say about the Administration. I hope all will turn out right, and if it does not that the democracy will do some foolish thing in time to consolidate the republicans by the time of the next Presidential election.

Poor Morton † is dead! He is a great loss to the country. His patriotism never deserted him and the party had no abler expounder of its principles in the Senate. I hope his friends will see that his family do not want.

Please present Mrs. Grant's and my kindest regards to Mrs. Beale and Miss Emma.‡

Yours truly,

U. S. GRANT.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 6th, '78.

MY DEAR GENERAL: After a delightful trip through Egypt; up the Nile to the first falls; back to Cairo; to Suez and through the Suez Canal to Port Said; to Jaffa and Jerusalem; to Smyrna and Ephesus, we are now at this historically interesting place. We have been here five days, and leave this evening for Athens. The city is very quiet, but in government circles one discovers a deep gloom. The Russians are but a few miles outside of the city and can come in when they please. But as terms have been signed, and the Russian Minister to Turkey is now in this city, they may abstain from coming in altogether. I feel a great desire to visit the Russian camp, but as the Turks have been very hospitable, and might look upon such a visit with suspicion, I shall refrain.

I was invited to an audience with the Sultan the other day, and to visit his private stable of thoroughbred Arabian horses. A Turkish admiral, who was educated in England, and speaks perfect English, acted as interpreter. After we had left the Sultan he sent for the admiral, who, on returning, said that "His Imperial Majesty" would send to the ship on the following day one of the horses and equipments. I thanked him very kindly, but declined on the ground that the ship was not coming directly to the United States, that I should not go back soon myself, etc. But in visiting the stables—where there are sixty or seventy of these horses; it may be more—I found the officers were anxious to get my views as to which were the best. There were three, one a beautiful dappled grey, one a blood bay and one a sorrel, which I designated as very beautiful. Dining last night with the Minister of War—at which the Cabinet and many other officials and others were present—I was told that the Sultan would think hard of it if I should decline to receive the horse, and that he would be sent to Marseilles for me. If he is I shall make arrangements to have him sent to Liverpool, to the care of our Consul, Gen. Fairchild, to be shipped by him to Phila., to your care. If he goes I hope you will take him and use him—for breeding purposes or otherwise—as your own until I call for him, which may not be for a year or two. These horses, I am told, have their pedigrees kept for one or two hundred years back, and are of the purest blood. It may be of some value to breeders in the United States to get some of this blood, and if so I will be amply repaid. I will make arrangements for the payment of all expenses in getting the horse to Phila., and when I return will pay all other expenses.

* Mme. Bakmatieff, General Beale's daughter.
† O. P. Morton of Indiana.
‡ Mrs. John R. McLean.

It is more than probable now that I will return to the U. States next fall. But, if so, I shall not go to housekeeping—except at Long Branch in the summer—until the fall of '79, and where I have not yet determined. Washington is my choice, but this I will leave to be determined after my return.

I received your very welcome letter at Smyrna, and one at the same time from Adml. Ammen. I get the home papers now with muc regularity, and regret to see politics at home in such a troubled condition. We learn that the Silver Bill*—which I regard as dishonest and very destructive to the interest of the country—has passed both houses by a large majority. I hope the President will veto it, and that his veto will prevail. Should it pass I look to the best interests of the country rendering it nugatory by refusing to make contracts except on a gold basis. The double standard I regard as wholly impracticable. The currency of lesser value will drive the better out of market. Gold would simply become an article of merchandise, being bought and sold at so much premium. The Supreme Court will no doubt decide that part of the law which makes silver a legal tender in payment of principle and interest on the public debt as unconstitutional—ex post facto.

Mrs. Grant joins me in desiring to be kindly remembered to Mrs. Beale and your family.

If you should write to me within a few days of the receipt of this, direct to Rome, I will no doubt get it there. Later direct to the care of Drexel, Harjes & Co., Paris.

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

* Bland Bill.

COPENHAGEN, July 7th, '78.

MY DEAR GENERAL: We arrived here this a. m. and found a mail for us, and with it your welcome letter written after your return home. I wish I could be with you long enough to visit the farm and the colts. I look forward to my return to the States with more pleasure than I do upon any visits yet proposed to countries I have not yet visited. Since seeing you I have done up Holland and North Germany very thoroughly. The Hollanders are a great people, good-looking, industrious, free and rich. North Germany is better than I expected to find, that is, more productive. The people, of course, we know all about. We have them by the tens of thousands at home. On Friday we leave here to go through Norway, where I hope to do some fishing. After that we will go through Sweden, Russia and Austria; after which we will take a run through Spain and then settle down for the winter, some place. In the spring we will go home in time to be an early settler at our Long Branch home—the only one we have.

Now that Congress has adjourned it is to be hoped that business will revive, harmony prevail, and the newspapers become stupid for the want of exciting or sensational topics to write upon. I note what you say about the prospects for '80, and hear the same thing from other sources—letters and papers. But with the revival of business all this will be forgotten, and I am very sure it will be gratifying to me. I have had all the honors, and would like to avoid the vexations of political life for the future. Although not sensitive to abuse of opponents,—who slander without regard to facts,—I do not care to be a constant antagonist. I have children—and children's children, in a small way—who may be affected by these things, and I want to spare them. I am very glad Phelps has been continued as one of the commissioners for the district. I know a more competent or honest officer could not have been selected. Then he is acquainted with the duties. He has too, large executive abilities, with the strictest integrity behind—qualities inculcated by both the Military and Naval Service. I received a letter from Phelps some time ago—more than a month—which I am ashamed to say I have not answered. Give him my kindest regards and say that I had got into a sort of rut in the way of writing to a few persons,—ten or a dozen outside of my own family,—and that while I intended writing to him I have always found that when I do sit down to write I have more letters to answer than I can get through with.

Remember me to my Washington friends—and Long Branch ones too, where I suppose this will find you—and Mrs. Grant's love to Mrs. Beale and Miss Emily, and my kindest regards.

Very truly yours,
U. S. GRANT.

PAU, FRANCE, December 6th, '78.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Your letter of the 29th of Oct. reached me—or rather I found it—at Gibraltar about three weeks ago. It made me more homesick than I was to be back again and to be with you in some of your visits to the farm. I shall be sorry if Bob Acres does not turn out a trotter. But my means will not allow me to indulge much in fancy stock.

We have nearly determined to go by the way of India, and to go by the U. S. steamer Richmond which leaves for the Mediterranean on the 10th, four days from now. I have cabled to the Sec. of the Navy to-day, accepting his invitation to take passage in her. It would be delightful to have you along, as you propose,* but Mrs. Grant would not give up the trip for the world. In fact, she has been urging me to go that way ever since I first announced my determination to return by the Atlantic.

We have seen the capitols, and most of the principal towns, and the people of every country in Europe. I have not yet seen any to be jealous of. The fact is we are the most progressive, freest, and richest people on earth, but don't know it or appreciate it. Foreigners see this much plainer than we do. While all other nations are exercised how to raise more taxes out of an over-burdened people to pay the interest on debts already contracted, and to support large armies and navies to protect themselves, we are reducing taxation and paying off our debt.

The results of the Nov. elections, in the North, are very encouraging. I am glad the elections of Conkling and Cameron are insured.

Mrs. Grant sends her love to Mrs. Beale and Miss Emily. Mrs. Grant says to tell Miss Emily that she has heard, away out here, of the swell team she and Buck † attended the Wise-Hopkins wedding with. My kindest regards to the ladies also.

Yours truly,
U. S. GRANT.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE GENERAL,
SHANGHAI, May 23d, 1879.

MY DEAR GENERAL: A mail is just in and brings your letter of the 13th of March. Yours of the 3d reached me at Hongkong. The dialogue which you give that took place between you and a Northern democratic Congressman is discouraging enough. But I have strong faith in the people when real danger comes. The experience of the rebellion is not going to be thrown away. Should there be a second rebellion during the life of people engaged in the last it would be dealt with most summarily, and would be so thoroughly put down as to keep it down for ever. You would not witness again the instigators of rebellion dictating laws for the government of the loyal.

I have now been in this greatest commercial city of China six days. My reception has been the most cordial and most demon-

* General Beale proposed in his letter, to which this is an answer, that Mrs. Grant might stay with Mrs. Beale in some pleasant climate during the journey around the world.

† U. S. Grant Jr.

strative I have witnessed since leaving England. But Young's * letters to the Herald will give full description.

We leave in an hour for Tientsin and Peking. After going to the great wall we will go to Japan, where I shall stay five or six weeks. I should like to go back by Honolulu, but doubt whether I will be able to do so.

Mrs. Grant joins me in much love to you and all your family.

Very truly your friend,
U. S. Grant.

United States Consulate General,
Peking, China, June 7th, '79.

My Dear General: I have now been to the limit of my travels in China. From here we take the back track to Tientsin, and thence to Japan as rapidly as a U. S. vessel of war—seven knots an hour—can carry us. I must say that neither the country nor the people attract the traveller to pay them a second visit. But I have visited the country under the most favorable circumstances to see and study the people, institutions, etc., and have drawn rather a favorable view of their future from all I have seen. In the first place, they are enduring, patient to the last degree, industrious, and have brought living down to a minimum. By their shrewdness and economy they have monopolized nearly all the carrying trade—coastwise—of the East, they are driving out all other merchants; through India, Malay, Siam, and the islands from the shores of Africa to Japan, they are the mechanics, market-gardeners, stevedores, small traders, servants and everything else that goes to mark material progress. They are not a military power and could not defend themselves against even a small European power. But they have the material for a strong, independent nation and may, before many years roll around, assert their power. Their leading men thoroughly appreciate their weakness, but understand at the same time the history of Turkey, Egypt and other powers that have made rapid strides towards the new civilization on borrowed capital, and with foreign management and control. Their idea seems to be to gradually educate a sufficient number of their own people to fill all places in the development of railroads, manufactories, telegraphs, and everything new to them, but common—if not old—with us. Then, with their own men and capital, to commence a serious advancement. I would not be surprised to hear within the next twenty years, if I should live so long, more complaint of Chinese absorption of the trade and commerce of the world than we hear now of their backward position. But before this change begins to show itself there will be a change of dynasty. The present form of government gives no State power whatever. It may take off the heads of weak offenders or of a few obnoxious persons, but is as weak against outside powers as we would be if "States' Rights," as interpreted by Southern democrats, prevailed. There are so many powers within the government as to prevent the whole from exercising its full strength against a common enemy.

Mrs. Grant's and my love to you and all your family.

Very truly yours,
U. S. Grant.

Tokio, Japan, August 10th, 1879.

My Dear General: The time is now near at hand for my departure for the States. On the 27th of this month we sail on the steamer City of Tokio. It is my intention to remain several weeks on the Pacific and visit Oregon and Washington territory. On the way home I shall stop over a few days at Virginia City; a few days at Salt Lake, and from Cheyenne I shall go south to Denver where—or at Colorado Springs—I shall leave Mrs. Grant while I run out to Leadville. Returning from the latter place we will go directly to Galena, the only place where I have a residence. I shall not go east probably before the holidays. I will then accept yours and Mrs. Beale's proffered hospitalities for a few days while there. I shall not want to remain in Washington long while Congress is in session.

I have now been six or seven weeks in Japan. The country and people are exceedingly interesting. The progress that has been made in this country in a few years is more like a romance than a reality. They have school facilities for every child in the empire, male and female, equal to the Northern States of the Union. Their Naval and Military Academies, their colleges and their school of science are equal to the best of ours in the course taught and mode of instruction. In all their higher educational institutions the text-books are in English, hence the students must learn the English. Already the mass of their professors are natives, many of them having been educated in the schools where they now teach.

* John Russell Young.

Remember us all to Mrs. Beale and all your family. Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

GALENA, ILL., May 16th, 1880.

MY DEAR GEN. BEALE: I was glad to receive your letter of the 27th of Apl. I should have written to you from Mexico, but I knew you had gone to California, did not know your address there, and expected your return to Washington before this.—My last trip was quite as pleasant as any that preceded it. Mexico has made no great strides since we were there as young men. But it is just preparing for rapid development. With a peaceable Presidential election this summer, and quiet inauguration following, Mexico will be able to invite foreign capital to build her roads, develop her sugar, coffee, tobacco and mines, and build up a commerce commensurate with her great natural resources. Now that we have roads going to her very borders they should form connections with a whole net-work in that country. We are now paying two hundred millions a year, in sterling exchange, for tropical and semi-tropical products which Mexico could furnish, and would receive largely in exchange the products of our soil and manufactories.

The campaign east of the mountains has been unprecedented. The democratic papers need not bother their heads for matter to fill up their campaign documents. All they need to do will be to republish what the republican papers have said about the candidates whose nomination they opposed. But I hope the election will come out right.

Buck returned two weeks ago. Jesse we hear nothing from. Ere this I hope he is at your house.

I forgot to mention that I did not go to Honolulu, because I found that it would be impossible to get to the Pacific from Mexico with any comfort with ladies and all the interminable baggage they carry.

With kindest regards of Mrs. Grant and myself, Yours truly,

U. S. GRANT.

GALENA, ILL., September 3d, 1880.

MY DEAR GEN. BEALE: Your very kind letter advising against my accepting the position assigned me by the papers with the San Pedro Mining Co. was duly received. I had examined the property and really believe it to be the most valuable piece of mining property now known. I had the offer of the Presidency of the Co. with a good salary, and a part ownership, on favorable terms, with an assurance that the stock would not be put upon the market, nor any of it sold. With these conditions I thought I would accept, but fortunately declined to do so until I should go to New York City in the fall. Soon I saw some of the property was being sold, it apparently having enhanced in value in the estimation of some people as soon as my connection with it was published, and the temptation being too great for some of them to withstand. I at once wrote casting much doubt about my having anything to do with it. Later, learning of at least one person who had purchased on the assurance that I had, or would undoubtedly accept the charge, I wrote, positively declining to have anything to do with it.

Your letter stated that you would go to Wasington in a short time. I address this to you there therefore. We will leave here for the east in less than a month, not to return before next spring. Where we will spend the winter is not yet determined, but probably a good deal of it will be in Washington City. That is where I prefer to make my principal home, but circumstances may compel me to locate elsewhere. There are two subjects I wish particularly to promote, if in my power—the construction of an Inter-Oceanic Canal, and the building of railroads in Mexico to connect with ours—and these subjects may possibly fix my location without reference to my preferences. Mrs. Grant and I will certainly meet you and Mrs. Beale during the fall or winter, either in New York or Washington, or both.

With the best regards of Mrs. Grant and I to you and all your family, I am

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, N. Y. CITY,
October, 22d, 1880.

MY DEAR GEN. BEALE: Mrs. Grant received a letter from Emily asking her to accompany me when I go to Washington, and be your guest. She will do so, but I cannot say now when we will go. If not so engaged as to detain me here, or elsewhere permanently, we expect to spend the winter from early Jan. in Washington. In that case we will either get a house or make some hotel arrangement. But we will pay you a visit in the meantime. It will probably be shortly after the election. It looks to me now as if the result of the election was assured. This State will certainly go republican, and I rather think all the Northern States will go the same way. I felt as if I could not bear the idea of the democrats getting possession of the Govt. and to show my sympathy with the cause consented to preside at the Warren, Ohio, meeting. It has caused me a world of trouble. Letters and dispatches, and committees are after me day and night to go to this place and that, to some of which I have been compelled, for my own peace of mind, to give my consent. I am glad it will all be over soon. I should not mind so much attending these meetings only that as soon as I make my appearance there is a universal shout for me to say something, and the people will not be quieted without it. Speaking before the public is a terrible trial for me, and being totally without verbal memory I cannot prepare anything in advance to say. But I cut it short and get out the best I can, much to the disgust apparently of the democratic papers, which think that of all the country I am the least entitled to a political opinion. If we had two National parties, neither dangerous to the prosperity and welfare of the country, I would agree with them in saying that it would be much more dignified for me to keep out of the arena of politics. But our sacrifice of blood and treasure has been too great to loose all the good results now to save a little dignity. I sincerely believe that a democratic success now would be almost as disastrous as a war, and that the disaster would be no less to our section or to our party than to the other.

With kind regards of Mrs. Grant and myself to you and all your family,

Very truly yours, U. S. GRANT.

NEW YORK CITY, November 25th, '80.

MY DEAR GEN. BEALE: I find now my engagements will keep me here until after the 9th of Dec. I will, therefore, go to Washington on Monday, the 13th. I am busy to-day trying to get up with a correspondence which gets much behind the best I can do.

When you were here I told you that no one I talked to took any interest in the Canal. The railroad men are indifferent, but say that before the canal could be built, if commenced now, the wheat of California will be coming to the Gulf of Mexico, or New Orleans, by rail cheaper than it could be transported via San Francisco to the Pacific end of the canal. Railroads in Mexico are receiving the enthusiastic endorsement of railroad men with capital to build them, and of capitalists generally. They will be built now as fast as human labor can construct them.

With kind regards of Mrs. Grant and I to Mrs. Beale and Miss Emily,

Yours very truly,
U. S. GRANT.

OLD POINT COMFORT, VA.

MY DEAR GENERAL BEALE: I have your letter of Friday asking my endorsement of Gen. Ayres for the Brig. Generalcy to be made vacant by the retirement of Gen. McKenzie. I know Gen. Ayres very favorably, but I must decline from taking part in the contest for that officer. I am very loth to ask anything from this Administration further than can be granted by the different members of the Cabinet, most of whom I regard as personal friends. Then, too, I regard Merritt as coming next in order of services rendered though I am not going to give him—or any one—an indorsement.

We arrived here without any fatigue, though the weather is as bad here as in New York, barring the cold. I do not think we will remain long.

We may go back by way of Washington and stop off for a few days. If we do, however, we will stop at a hotel because of my condition and the number of people who will be calling at my room. We will make you a visit later when I am able to get about. Then too we have a large family now, three of us and two servants. I am writing with a bad hotel pen and a trembling hand.

With kindest regards of Mrs. Grant and myself and Miss Sharp* to you, Mrs. Beale and Miss Emily, I am

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., June 26th, '84.

MY DEAR GENERAL BEALE: Your letter of yesterday just received. It is very good of you to take so much interest in the bill for my retirement. But I cannot suggest any member of Congress for you to see. All the members I know personally, except Rosecrans, are in favor of the bill, and I do not know of but one other, Springer, who opposes it. No doubt there are others who do, but I have not heard of them expressing any particular opposition. I have not felt that the bill would pass this session, if at all. I need it very much and would feel grateful for it, particularly if it should pass the House as it did the Senate. I am not as familiar with the rules of the House as I should be. But my recollection is that a bill cannot be taken from the Speaker's table except by unanimous consent. If I am correctly informed Springer and Rosecrans will not give theirs.

We all hope that Mrs. Beale and Emily are steadily improving in health. It may be that we will run up to Deer Park for a week in August. We have now a large family here. Nellie and family and Fred and family are here. But there is always a spare room for you if you come this way, and for Mrs. Beale and Emily if they are along.

With love from Mrs. Grant to your family,

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

December 16th, 1884.

MY DEAR GENERAL BEALE: Mrs. Grant and I are very much obliged to you and Mrs. Beale for your kind invitation to visit you; but unless I improve very materially from my present conditional (sic) I will not be able to leave home this winter. I am now a great sufferer from my throat. It is nearly impossible for me to swallow enough to sustain life, and what I do swallow is attended with great pain. It pains me even to talk. I have to see the doctor daily, and he does not encourage me to think that I will be well soon. Mrs. Grant and I would go to the Hot Springs in Arkansas; but the doctor does not deem it advisable to do so.

With kindest regards to all your family,

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

NEW YORK CITY, January 6, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: Through the press and otherwise, I learn that you, with a few other friends of mine, are engaged in raising a subscription for my benefit. I appreciate both the motive and the friendship which has dictated this course on your part, but on mature reflection, I regard it as due to myself and family to decline this proffered generosity.

I regret that I did not make this known earlier.

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

CYRUS W. FIELD, ESQ.

NEW YORK CITY, January 24, 1885.

MY DEAR GENERAL BEALE: Your letter of the 20th was duly received. I am much obliged to Mrs. Beale for her kind expression about my Shiloh article. It will, I have no doubt, be severely criticised. But I have told in it the exact truth as I saw it.

Mrs. Grant says we will accept yours and Mrs. Beale's kind invitation to visit you soon after the 4th of March. But I have no idea that I will be able to go. My throat is giving me much trouble, and I must see the doctor daily. There was about two weeks of last month, and the first of this, when I could not speak, for the pain it gave me. I am now having a similar turn, but not so bad. If I should be in a condition to leave the doctor's care by the 4th of March, or at any time in the spring, I will be glad to go.

Very truly yours,

U. S. GRANT.

* Mrs. Grant's neice.

"FOR EAST IS EAST, AND WEST IS WEST"

By Mary Gay Humphreys

ILLUSTRATION BY H. C. WALL

" HAT in the world has gone with that star?"

We were each in an easy chair on the ranch porch. "We" included two cats; one, who had adopted us, named Thomasita, a black cat with white hind legs which gave him the air of stalking about in pajamas; the other, Little Pink, was a scrub yellow kitten who screamed for everything she wanted and got it; and now had the easiest chair of all. It had a cushion. The third four-footed member of our group was Rollie, our faithful guardian, a dog of no degree, who spent his days in chasing coyotes, also his nights, when he was not dreaming of chasing them. We others were merely four women, three ranchers and their visitor.

Five miles up a lovely but lonely canyon we had no mails, except when some chance wayfarers brought them, since cloudbursts had gashed the roads and made them impassable. Consequently, as we lay back at our ease idly wondering where that star had gone, we were witnessing unwittingly the occultation of Mars, which some days later the newspapers informed us was a performance of wide-spread interest. However, our wonder at the disappearance of the star was merely in passing, our conversation being of another sort.

For twenty-five years these women ranchers, coming from a large city, had lived thus remotely. Now that the open range had passed away they had sold off their excess herds and were their own cowboys. Except on great occasions such as branding, when the neighboring ranches sent help, they lived entirely alone. In this almost inconceivable isolation they kept touch with the great world without by means of those magazines and accommodating periodicals which present the progress of the sphere in tabloid form for the benefit of the busy and the remote, and with stories reflecting the manners and morals of the day.

Even with these aids there were wide gaps in their knowledge of the outer civilization, missing links, new coinage of words, inverted meanings, inexplicable changes in customs familiar in their girlhood, still greater changes in the spiritual and ethical outlook of the day. They went to town to vote at the appointed season, but this was all in the day's work; as to that creature, the new woman, of whom they had read so much, they were sorely perplexed. Thus there was an infinitude of talk as we endeavored to bring our two diverse civilizations within one another's comprehension.

For their environment was as inexplicable to me, just out of the whirlpool in which I had so nearly been engulfed, as mine to them. I had come from the seething centre of things, days and nights of bridge and other lady-like dissipations, of breathless runs in motor-cars to keep pace with my kind; this on my part. On the part of my family, the see-saw of the stock-market on which I was tossed now high, now low by forces beyond my control. . One day we were rolling in the wealth of the sanguine, the next buried by the woes of the male Cassandras of the household, who saw the country on the verge of perdition. Now, I was gratifying the caprice of the moment, and now, despairing before the heaping up of the monthly bills. When the warm days came a friendly young doctor took me in hand.

"Your nerves are fiddle-strings. Beat it. You for the simple life. Three months at least, better six."

I took it as all medical advice because it fell in with my inclinations. I came to San Christos canyon, where except in emergencies we did nothing but eat, sleep, and talk; and talk like a rivulet overflowed the islets of eating, and even the longer stretches of sleep. This evening it flowed continuously. Salina had begun lightly enough.

"Do nice women smoke cigarettes?"

"Well, yes."

"You don't."

"Thanks for the implication. I can't. The tobacco always gets in my mouth."

"It seems incredible that women who wear lingerie gowns should smoke like men."

"She's thinking of her latest heroine," Elena suggested.

"What have lingerie gowns to do with it, Salina?" I inquired.

"They seem to me to lack the dramatic instinct," she continued musingly without answering me. "Page in her cowboy dress riding the range with a cigarette in her mouth would look all right."

"Page!" exclaimed Maria. "Don't say that to her. Page would be mightily shocked at the bare suggestion."

"Page? Is that the little girl who breaks broncos? She's awfully fetching in her costume. By the way, Salina, where is your dramatic instinct when you go cowboying in a mother hubbard and a sunbonnet?" I ventured.

"When she wears a peaked Mexican hat she is the image of the old woman riding a broomstick. I'll show you a snap shot I caught one day up the canyon," laughed Elena.

"I've no time to costume myself when I look for a missing calf or chase cattle thieves."

"No, her appearance scares them off," Elena persisted.

"But, Salina, what may a woman do in a lingerie gown?" I returned to our theme.

"Well"—she gave the matter some thought. "Why, for one thing, fan. Don't women fan any more? The stories scarcely ever mention fans," she turned on me. I gave her question some consideration.

"I don't recall fans except as wedding presents, and those are too fine for action. You see, this is an athletic age," I continued, feeling my way. "Women don't mind getting red; they fairly mop their faces with their handkerchiefs."

"In my days we were brought up to use fans. A fan shows off one's rings, and keeps the blood out of the hands, not to mention its conversational possibilities in critical moments. Humph. So women have laid down their fans and taken up cigarettes, rackets, and bats."

"With Salina one swallow always did make a summer," Elena interposed. "On those cigarettes she will construct the entire fabric of your curious society."

"Certainly." She accepted the challenge. "Cuvier only needed a bone. I have faith in what the French call 'indications.' I am like an old-fashioned doctor. I believe in symptoms. Such things are symptoms. Do cocktails go with cigarettes, and of course gambling at bridge?"

"They've been known to. But, Salina, don't profess to be shocked at cocktails," I protested. "I'll wager that you have sipped the sugar at the bottom of toddy glasses many a day when you were in pigtails."

"I am not shocked. I am trying to understand. Certainly I was brought up in a land of toddies; but please don't compare those exchanges of courtesy and reminiscence for which toddy merely gave the opportunity with the modern cocktail."

"I thought she would take the medical tack," whispered Elena.

"Not at all," Maria whispered back. "She is making for the upper ether."

"Cocktails, from the stories I read, are an artificial stimulus to the appetite, and are taken by women as well as men," Salina went on in her Johnsonian manner.

"Certainly. Handed about before dinner," I admitted.

"Tossed down, not drank—not a moment for wit or repartee," she supplemented. "Of course, in a healthy state of society such an artificial stimulus would not be needed. Compared with pipes or cigars and toddies, cocktails and cigarettes are sophistications and indicate a sophisticated social state. Women were never given to pipes and toddies when I was in the world, and woman is the barometer of any stage of civilization."

"Both cigarettes and cocktails are brief," I teasingly pleaded in extenuation.

"Yes, they belong to a hurried, breathless age, the age of get-rich-quick schemes, the success of the short story, and I expect one sees it in the culture of the day," she sighed.

"Culture?" I protested. "That's another pair of shoes. Nowadays one only thinks of culture in connection with bacilli."

"There it is again. Liberties with the very language. This constant perversion."

"What do you mean?" Elena, who was the student and read book reviews, broke in. "I always thought culture was such a decent word. Out here we lower our voices when we utter it."

"Then don't do it again. Scream it. Toss it to the high heavens."

"What then shall we say?" she and Maria chimed together.

"Forget it," I cried shamelessly, in what was to them an unknown tongue and with insane gesture.

By these tokens I knew that the crystalline air and ranch life that came so much nearer things elemental than I had ever encountered had laid hold on me—aided, I confess, by something of the hysteria of high altitudes.

Salina had left her chair to suggest to a wandering young rooster that it was time for chickens, at least, to be in bed. When she had settled herself I continued:

"Life with you is a return to simple elements. Here there are no programmes. You meet things when you come to them. Each event is the result of a new combination of circumstances and must be dealt with accordingly. If you have any standards to which things may be referred, I haven't encountered them. It means a lot of responsibility for the individual. The individual is not important with us. Here everything must be decided on the spot, and as if it had never happened before. There are no precedents. Half the time since I have been here I haven't known where I am at. That's all right. Never mind the grammar; it's congressional."

"I haven't an idea of what you mean. Illustrate."

"I will. The other day when we had visitors from town you brought in the lady who does the washing and cooked the dinner, and said: 'Ladies, this is our friend, Mrs. McPhail, who is kind enough to look after us,' and we made a place for her. I must say she was very shy about it."

"Yes, I see. She was born a Scotch peasant. What else?" ignoring explanation. "Your guests last week were a well-known cattle rustler——"

"Yes, who scoured the country one entire night to get a nurse for me when I had the pneumonia. Go on."

"A judge, one of Quantrill's men, who sought seclusion in the valley below many years ago."

"Yes. He is now on the school board." She waited expectantly.

"And Uncle Henry Jacobs, important member of a family of bandits, and has rustled your cattle many a time."

"And notwithstanding is a very good neighbor on other occasions, although I wouldn't leave an axe helve unguarded when he is here. What more?"

"Well, I am no more at ease with your polite society. Your suave composure when Mrs. Augusta Angevine told me that poetry came natural to her because her father was a bosom friend of Hiawatha filled me with admiration while I hid behind my napkin."

"I'll take you over the hill to her ranch," Elena hastened to offer, "and she will show you a photograph of Mr. Roosevelt—'Teddy,' she affectionately calls him—hung by the side of the 'Three Maggies,' and she will tell you how she just loves those old men following the star."

We laughed the laugh of the scornful, but Salina did not mean to be side-tracked by such frivolities.

"It does mean responsibility for the individual—more than you realize. If the law, moral or social, does not meet the situation we make the law what it should be If a Slav during a strike needs meat for his children and kills one of my calves—well, that is reasonable. After all, the coyotes are only marketing for their families when they haunt the chicken yard. I am bound to defend my property, but I hold the coyotes morally guiltless. But when Jack Hollister kills one of my steers and hides the skin lest my brand gives him away—well, if I could catch him, I would shoot him as I wouldn't shoot a dog."

"Of course, I can see that it is these opportunities for instant decision that make you so resourceful. That also is the reason you are never bored. It fascinates me. You are always on the eve of some situation that counts, and what it is to be you can never anticipate."

Here Rollie growling ominously made for one of his private passageways under the fence. There is no mistaking Rollie's note. This meant danger. Elena reached in-doors for the six-shooter that always lay on the table by the door. The moon, that had been sauntering in and out the dark, rolling clouds, was now shrouded. Grouped together, peering through the darkness, we saw a man with a rifle running from the hill across the mesa. Salina was the first to speak.

"It's Pedro. Something is up."

Rollie had stopped growling and ran by the side of the man, who opened the gate and came toward us. It was a piteous figure, breathless, water streaming from his face, which beneath was gray and wan, his eyes bloodshot and his coat torn by the underbrush. He sank on the lower step, and the strong arms of Maria helped him on to the porch. Little Pink stood up on her cushion and stretched herself. Elena swept her off and Pedro sank down, unable to speak.

Salina picked up the rifle and examined it.

"Pedro has killed somebody," she said unwittingly, paying a tribute to his skill.

"Si," he whispered.

"Who?"

"Juanita's man. They're after me." He straightened himself in his chair, his eyes trying to pierce the darkness, our eyes following his.

"Keep quiet everybody," Salina commanded. "When you can, let me know all about it. You've been drinking, Pedro."

"Si, ma'am," he breathed. "John Bucks too."

"The Dutchman, your sister's man?"

"Si."

Courage seemed to come back to him, surrounded by friends. We were only four women, but we represented to Pedro the dominating Americanas. Elena had left us; we heard her moving stealthily inside.

"Don't make a light, Elena."

"I'm not such an idiot. Where did you put that cold tea?"

"On the pantry window," Maria interposed.

Pedro, half-breed Apache and Mexican, had been on the ranch at intervals since he was a small boy. For three years he had been the cowboy, and had only left when the fencing of the ranges and the reduction of the herds made him no longer necessary. Since then he had worked in a mining camp. But his devotion to the Americanas was like the fealty of a dog.

"Pedro, they told me you had become 'bad hombre.'"

"Si, ma'am," he said humbly.

"Elena, stop making that noise."

"Drat that footstool," we heard Elena muttering in the dark.

Pedro swallowed the lumps in his throat, and sank back in his chair. His exhaustion was the more piteous now that he had found friends and could yield to it.

"John Bucks lick Juana, one, two times. Then I lick John Bucks, and we have blood together. To-day we both drink, mucho, and we make names between us."

Elena interrupted him with her strong, cold tea, and Pedro gulped it down. The tea tightened up his quivering nerves, and he sat up again.

"Then we fight, and John Bucks knock me down and put foot on me. I bite his leg, and he make for knife on table. Then I get gun, but I can't get John Bucks until I make so far." Pedro took up his rifle and brought it to his eye, to indicate that he had to have sufficient distance. "Then I catch John Bucks."

"Perhaps you did not kill him, Pedro," Maria suggested.

"With gun I miss no man. He no move. I saw people run and I hide in hill. When everybody run to John Bucks, I go other way and get street car to Tertio. Then I 'phone to Jose to bring horses to old coal-mine, and I hear that boy cry loud, very loud. He say officers watching horses—officers there already. Then I run to hills and hide until I find horses."

"Who gave you the horses?" Elena asked.

"I took horses," he repeated.

"One already saddled?" doubt in her tone.

"I took horses." Evidently he did not mean to tell.

"What difference does it make where he got horses, Elena?" To Salina that he had horses was the salient fact, not where he got them.

"My horses better." Pedro added. "You let me have short gun. My gun too long, if men get me."

"No, Pedro. One dead man is enough," said Salina.

Elena stepped inside and I heard her take the six-shooter from its place on the table and move away. Pedro heard too.

"You afraid of me, Mrs. Allen?" he asked.

"No, indeed, Pedro. But, do you know, I think you would get off. If you would like to give yourself up to the officers, I will go to town with you," Elena suggested.

Pedro sank back frightened in his chair and threw up his hands.

"Never. No, I die first. Never they get me alive. Jail too long. Court too long. Never."

"Sit down, Elena, and lower your voice. You wouldn't do it yourself, and what chance has a half-breed," Salina interposed. "There is no time to lose. As I argue, they'll think he'll make for the Americanas to get horses. What direction did the horses go this evening, Maria?"

"Down toward the Point."

"Wherever the horses are the officers will go. I don't think they'll come here, for they know that Pedro's Martini is good for that distance. They will wait for some one to come for the horses. Do you suppose that you could find out if they are there, Elena?" Salina turned to her sisters.

The Point was a quarter of a mile down the canyon where, piercing the arroya, it cut off the view of the house. Between the Point and the house lay the flat vega and above it the lawn-like mesa with its fringe of pinons. These traversed, a short climb to the ridge of the Point and the lower part of the canyon was in view. Immediately beneath was a glen, whose fresh lush grass was a favorite grazing-place for the broncos.

Thus far I had been a silent spectator, too much absorbed in this drama of life and death to do more than look and listen. It seemed to me that I was living as I had never lived before. These were things that counted. The instant rejection of all irrelevance, the close keeping down to the bone of the matter, and the immediate constructive efforts on the part of my friends fascinated me. But with Salina's questioning of Elena had come my turn to do something more than look and listen.

"I'll go with you, Elena."

"You. What are you thinking of?"

"I'm not thinking. It's a bad habit."

"All right. I'm glad of your company. We have no time to lose. Stay back, Rollie, you are not wanted." Disappearing, she came back with a little pistol she slipped in her pocket, and we climbed to the vega to seek the shelter of its trees.

"Look where you step, if you can. Twigs are more fatal than rattlers to-night." I had taken no thought of the snakes, now engaged in sloughing their skins and liable to be about, but even snakes now seemed to be a trifling matter. The clouds parting now and then sending down rifts of light from the moon now high in the heavens, we pushed nearer the deeper darkness of the trees. Above us on the hills we heard the irritable cry of a pack of coyotes crashing through the underbrush, and welcomed the sounds. Stealthily we made our way over the vega, which the Herefords kept smooth as a lawn, to the Point, which rose precipitately until it sharpened and was lost in the arroya. We dared not speak, but touched one another now and then to assure companionship. A gleeful fear, the most enchanting emotion I had ever experienced, possessed me and gave lightness to my feet. The slopes of the ridge we were about to climb in order to overlook the canyon were covered with young growth. Here we gathered our skirts closely about us and crept beneath. We could hear the soft cropping of a bunch of greedy cattle and the stirring of the horses. These helped to efface the sound of our movements which seemed painfully loud.

"Lie down," whispered Elena. "Flat."

Prone on the earth we drew ourselves up and peered over the ridge, where we could see the dusky forms of the broncos, but nothing more. We lay some time gazing into the darkness, when Elena breathed into my ear.

"Watch that deep black blotch on the other side of the rincon. I am sure it is a horse and buggy." We lay some moments watching it resolve into definiteness.

"I am satisfied they are there. Come."

We crept down the slope again and sped quickly along the smooth vega.

"They are watching for some one to come for the horses. They suspect Pedro is here. He must leave as quickly as possible and get over the Divide before light."

We ran light-footed to the house. There Salina and Maria with practised hands in the darkness had secured a flour sack and were filling it. Around them were a can of salmon, the half of a boiled tongue, a loaf of bread, and some potatoes.

"Pedro, have you any matches?" Pedro, with a tray on his lap now being fortified by food, shook his head, and a box of matches was added.

"Salina, there is a buggy around the Point. They are watching the horses. You had better get Pedro away as soon as possible." Elena took the little pistol from her pocket as she came up the step. Pedro reached out his hand.

Drawn by H. C. Wall.

Pedro sank down, unable to speak. Salina picked up the rifle and examined it.—Page 483.

"You will let me have the leetle gun?" he pleaded.

"No more gun-play, Pedro."

"Let me see, Pedro." Salina got up and fingered his cartridge belt. "Thirty-five steel bull-noses. Those ought to see you through. Pedro, get over into New Mexico as soon as you can. A clear twenty-four hours and you are safe."

"Where did you leave the horses, Pedro?" Maria asked.

"Under the toby tree," he answered, meaning a tree under which Toby, a steer, had been struck by lightning, and was one of the ranch landmarks.

"I'll bring them round to the back of the house, while you make ready to start."

"Pedro, have you any money?" Elena began to look for her purse in the darkness. He shook his head.

"I can scratch together a dollar for you. You know we keep no money here."

"Your coat is in rags. Anybody would know you had been in a scrap. Elena, look behind the door and get my old gray sweater. Yes, it is there. I knew it was. There, put that on, Pedro. That's better. Elena, take the flour sack; Lucy, pick up Pink. Somebody will step on her, and she has the voice of a steam whistle. Come, Pedro. Have you your rifle?"

Rollie and Thomasita seemed to realize the gravity of the situation and followed us quietly through the house. Pedro, like an automaton, appeared to have no volition. Under Salina's command he obeyed like a soldier. Behind the garden fence Maria stood with the horses, where we joined her.

"Make for Old Mexico, Pedro," Salina counselled as they gained the horses, "change your name, stop drinking, and behave yourself. When it is safe to write let us hear from you, but don't write until it is safe."

There were no waste words, no formal good-byes. We gathered silently about Pedro while he mounted, and watched him until he disappeared up the canyon among the trees.

"Well, that's all we can do," and Salina turned back to the house. "Elena, run ahead and light the lamp. Is there any of that cold pork left, Maria. I'm as hungry as a hunter."

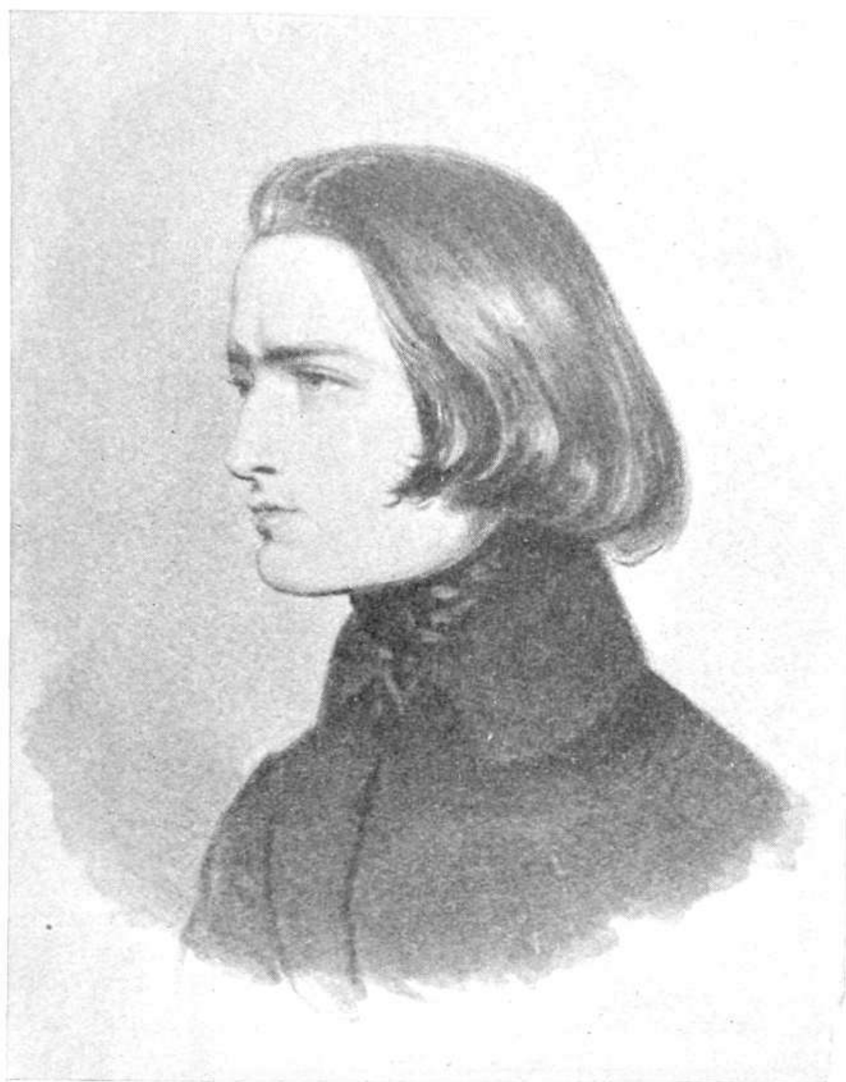
The little adobe kitchen shone brilliantly, and unmindful of deputies around the Point we resumed our usual loud and cheerful tones. My desire to thresh out the affair from every point of view seemed to meet with little response. Except for briefly expressed hopes concerning Pedro's success in eluding his pursuers if he took this road, or mistook that, the events seemed all in the day's work, and at present of no further moment.

I could not let it drop so easily. Helping murderers to escape had not been all in my day's work. I felt as if I had taken a bottle of quinine and iron, and an equal amount of champagne, and the effect on my constitution had been immediate. As we sat around the table, cheeks in hand, amid the wreck of bread, butter, pickles, and pork, I felt that some strength and effervescence must be expended before I could close my eyes.

The situation seemed made up of a network of considerations that we had not begun to take into account, and should furnish no end of conversation. There was, for example, our relation to the matter, of which no one had seemed to have a thought.

"Of course in the eyes of the law we are accessories after the fact," I said.

"Pooh," was Salina's only comment as she took up her candle and started for bed.



The youthful Liszt.

FRANZ LISZT

THE REAL AND LEGENDARY

(BORN OCTOBER, 1811)

By James Huneker

FRANZ LISZT said to a disciple of his: "Once Liszt helped Wagner, but who now will help Liszt?" This remark was made in 1874 when Liszt was well advanced in years, and his fame as piano virtuoso and name as composer were well-nigh eclipsed by the growing glory of Wagner, truly a glory he had helped to create. In youth an Orpheus pursued by the musical maenads of Europe, in old age Liszt was a Merlin dealing in white magic, still followed by the Viviens. The story of his career is as romantic as any by Balzac. And the end of it all—after a half century and more of fire and flowers, of proud, brilliant music-making—was positively tragical. A gentle King Lear, following with resignation the conquering chariot of a man, his daughter's husband, who owed him so much—and, despite criticism, acknowledged his debt—thus faithful to the end (he once declared that by Wagner he would stand or fall) Franz Liszt died a quarter of a century ago at Bayreuth, not as Liszt the Conqueror, but a world-weary pilgrim, petted and flattered when young, neglected as the star of Wagner arose on the horizon. If only Liszt could have experienced the success of poverty as did Wagner. But the usual malevolent fairy of the fable endowed him with all the gifts but poverty, and that capricious old Pantaloon, the Time-Spirit had his joke in the lonesome latter years.

As regards his place in the musical pantheon this erstwhile comet is now a fixed star, and his feet are set upon the white throne. There is no longer a Liszt Case; his music has fallen into critical perspective; but there is still a Liszt Case, psychologically speaking. Whether he was an archangel of light or, as Jean-Christophe describes him, "The noble priest, the circus-rider, neo-classical and vagabond, a mixture in equal doses of real and false nobility," is a question that may be answered according to one's temperament. That he was the captain of the new German music, a pianist without equal, a conductor of distinction, one who helped to make the orchestra and its leaders what they are to-day; that he was a writer, a reformer of church music, a man of the noblest impulses and ideals, generous, selfless and an artist to his finger tips —these are the commonplaces of history. As a personality he was an apparition; only Paganini had so electrified Europe. A charmeur, his love adventures border on the legendary; indeed, are largely legend. As amorous as a guitar, if we are to believe the romancers, the real Liszt was a man of intellect, a deeply religious soul, in middle years contemplative, even ascetic. His youthful extravagances, inseparable from his gypsy-like genius, and without a father to guide him, were remembered in Germany long after he had left the concert platform. His successes, artistic and social—especially the predilection for him of princesses and other noble dames—raised about his ears a nest of pernicious scandal-hornets. Had he not run away with the D'Agoult, the wife of a nobleman! Had he not openly lived with a married princess at Weimar, and under the patronage of the Grand Duke and Duchess and the Grand Duchess Maria Pavlowna, sister of the Czar of all the Russias! Besides, he was a Roman Catholic and that didn't please such orthodox musicians as Mendelssohn and Hiller, not to mention his own fellow-countryman, Joseph Joachim. Germany set the fashion in abusing Liszt. He had enjoyed too much success for one man and as a composer he must be made an example of; the services he rendered in defending the music of the insurgent Wagner was but another black mark against his character. And when Wagner did at last succeed, Liszt's share in the triumph was speedily forgotten. The truth is he paid the penalty for being a cosmopolitan. He was the first cosmopolitan in music. In Germany he was abused as a Magyar, in Hungary for his Teutonic tendencies—he never learned his mother-tongue; in Paris for not being French born—here one recalls the Stendhal case.

But he introduced into the musty academic atmosphere of musical Europe a strong fresh breeze from the Hungarian puzta; this wandering piano player of Hungarian-Austrian blood, a genuine cosmopolite, taught music a new charm, the charm of the unexpected, of the improvised. The freedom of Beethoven in his later works and of Chopin in all his music, became the principal factor in the style of Liszt. Music must have the shape of an improvisation. In the Hungarian rhapsodies, the majority of which begin in a mosque and always end in a tavern, are the extremes of his system. His orchestral and vocal works, the two symphonies, the masses and oratorios and symphonic poems, are full of dignity, poetic feeling, religious spirit, and a largeness of accent and manner. Yet the gypsy glance and gypsy voice lurk behind many a pious or pompous bar. Apart from his invention of a new form—or, rather the condensation and revisal of an old one—the symphonic poem—Liszt's greatest contribution to art is the wild, truant, rhapsodic extempore element he infused into modern music; nature in her most reckless, untrammelled moods he interpreted with fidelity. But the drummers in the line of moral gasoline who controlled criticism in Germany refused to see Liszt except as an ex-piano virtuoso with the morals of a fly and a perverter of art. Even the piquant triangle in his piano concerto was suspected as possibly suggesting the usual situation of French comedy.

The Liszt-Wagner question no longer presents any difficulties to the fair-minded. It is a simple one, for men still living know that Wagner, to reach his musical apogee, to reach his public, had to lean heavily on the musical genius and individual inspiration of Liszt. The later Wagner would not have existed—as we now know him—without first traversing the garden of Liszt. This is not a theory but a fact. Beethoven is, as Philip Hale pointed out, the last of the very great composers; there is nothing new since Beethoven, though plenty of persuasive personalities, much delving in mole-runs, many "new paths," leading nowhere, and much self-advertising. With its big drum and cymbals, its mouthing, melting phrases, its startling situations, its scarlet waistcoat, its hair oil and harlots, its treacle and thunder the Romantic movement swept over the map of Europe, irresistible, contemptuous of its adversaries, and boasting a wonderful array of names. Schumann and Chopin, Berlioz and Liszt, Wagner—in a class by himself—are a few that may be cited; not to mention Victor Hugo, Delacroix, Gautier, Heine, Alfred de Musset, Stendhal. But Beethoven still stood, stands to-day, four square to the universe. Wagner construed Beethoven to suit his own grammar. Why, for example, Berlioz should have been puzzled (or pretended to have been) over the first page of the Tristan and Isolde prelude is itself puzzling; the Frenchman was a deeply versed Beethoven student. If he had looked at the first page of the piano sonata in C minor—the Pathetic, so-called—the enigma of the Wagnerian phraseology would have been solved; there, in a few lines, is the kernel of the music-drama. This only proves Wagner's Shakesperian faculty of assimilation and his extraordinary gift in developing an idea; he borrowed his ideas whenever and wherever he saw fit. His indebtedness to Liszt was great, but equally so to Weber, Marschner, and Beethoven; his indebtedness to Berlioz ended with the externals of orchestration. Both Liszt and Wagner learned from Berlioz on this side.

Nevertheless, how useless to compare Liszt to Berlioz or Berlioz to Wagner. As well compare a ruby to an opal, an emerald to a ruby. Each of these three composers has his individual excellences. We call Liszt and Wagner the leaders of the moderns, but their aims and methods were radically different. Wagner asserted the supremacy of the drama over tone, and then, inconsistently, set himself down to write the most emotionally eloquent music that was ever conceived; Liszt always harped on the dramatic, on the poetic, and seldom employed words, believing that the function of instrumental music is to convey in an ideal manner a poetic impression. In this he was the most thorough-going of poetic composers; as much so in the orchestral domain as was Chopin in his piano-forte compositions. Since Wagner's music-plays are no longer a novelty "the long submerged trail of Liszt is making its appearance," as Ernest Newman happily states the case. The music-drama is not precisely in a rosy condition to-day. Opera is the weakest of musical forms, if form it be; the human voice inevitably limits the art, and we are beginning to wonder what all the Wagnerian menagerie, the birds, dragons, dogs, snakes, swans, toads, dwarfs, giants, horses, and monsters generally have to do with music; the music of the future is already the music of the past. The Wagner poems are uncouth, cumbersome machines. We long for a breath of humanity, and it is difficult to find it except in "Tristan and Isolde" or "Die Meistersinger." Alas! for the enduring quality of operatic music. Nothing stales like theatre music. In the not far distant future Wagner will gain, rather than lose, by being played in the concert room; that at least would dodge the ominously barren stretches of the Ring, and the early operas. And the New Zealander is already alive, though young, who will visit Europe to attend the last piano recital; that species of entertainment invented by Liszt, and by him described in a letter to the Princess Belgiojoso as colloquies of music and ennui.

The Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein—one naturally drops into the Almanach de Gotha when writing of the friends of Liszt—averred that Liszt had launched his musical spear further into the future than Wagner. She was a lady of firm opinions, who admired Berlioz as much as she loathed Wagner. But could she have foreseen that Richard Strauss, Parsifal-like, had caught the whizzing lance of the Klingsor of Weimar, what would she have said? Ask this riddle of contemporary critics of Richard II—who has, at least, thrown off the influence of Liszt and Wagner, although he, too, frequently takes snapshots at the sublime. Otherwise you can no more keep Liszt's name out of the music of to-day than could our good Mr. Dick the head of King Charles from the pages of his memorial.

His musical imagination was so versatile, his impressionability so lively that he translated into tone his voyages, pictures, poems —Dante, Goethe, Heine, Lamartine, "Obermann" (Senancour), even Sainte-Beuve ("Les Consolations"); legends, fountains of the Villa d'Este (Tivoli); not to mention canvases by Raphael, Michelangelo, and the insipid frescoes of Kaulbach. All was grist that came to his musical mill.

Wagner praised the music of Liszt in superlative terms. No need of quotation; the correspondence, a classic, is open to all. Once, in a moment of self-forgetfulness, he proclaimed Liszt as the greatest musician who had ever existed. That the symphonic poem was secretly antipathetic to Wagner is the bald truth. After all his rhapsodic utterances concerning the symphonies and poems of Liszt—from which he borrowed many a sparkling jewel to adorn some corner in his giant frescoes—he said in 1877: "In instrumental music I am a réactionnaire, a conservative. I dislike everything that requires verbal explanations beyond the actual sounds." And the most copious of commentators concerning his own music, in which almost every other bar is labelled with a leading motive! To this Liszt wittily answered—in an unpublished letter, 1878—that leading motives are comfortable inventions, for a composer does not have to search for a new melody. But what boots leading motives—as old as the hills and Johann Sebastian Bach—or symphonic poems nowadays! There is no Wagner, there is no Liszt question. After the unbinding of the classic forms the turbulent torrent is become the new danger. Who shall dam its speed! Brahms or Reger? The formal formlessness of the new school has placed Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner on the shelf, they are almost as remote as are Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. The symphonic poem is now a monster of appalling lengths, thereby, as Mr. Krehbiel suggests, defeating its chiefest reason for existence—brevity. The foam and fireworks of the impressionistic school, Debussy, Dukas and Ravel, and the rest, are enjoyable; the piano music of Debussy has the iridescence of a spider's web touched by the fire of the setting sun; his orchestra is a jewelled conflagration. But he stems, like the others, the Russians included, from Liszt. Charpentier and his followers are Wagner à la coule. Where it will all end no man dare predict. But Mr. Newman is right in the matter of programme music. It has come to stay; modified as it will be in the future. Too much bricks and mortar, the lust of the ear as well as the lust of the eye, glutted by the materialistic machinery of the Wagner music-drama, has driven the lovers of music for music's sake back to Beethoven; or, in extreme cases, to novel forms wherein vigorous affirmations are dreaded as much as an eight-bar melody. For those meticulous temperaments that recoil from a clangorous chord there are the misty tonalities of Debussy or the verse of Paul Verlaine. However, the aquarelles and pastels and landscapes of Debussy or Ravel were invented by Urvater Liszt—caricatured by Wagner in the person of Wotan; all the impressionistic school may be traced to him as its fountain-head. Think of the little sceneries scattered through his piano music, particularly in his "Years of Pilgrimage," or of the storm and stress of the Dante sonata.

II

The year 1811 was the year of the great comet. Its wine is said to have been of a richness; some well-known men were born, beginning with Thackeray and John Bright; Napoleon's son, the unhappy Duc de Reichstadt, first saw the light that year, as did Jules Dupré, Théophile Gautier, and Franz Liszt. There will be no disputes concerning the date of his birth, October 22d, as was the case with Chopin. His parents, according to a terrific family register, were originally noble; but the father of Franz, Adam Liszt, was a manager of the Esterhazy estates in Hungary at the time his only son and child was born. He was very musical, knew Joseph Haydn, and was an admirer of Hummel, his music and playing. The mother's maiden name was Anna Lager (or Laager) a native of lower Austria, with German blood in her veins.

She was of a happy and extremely vivacious nature, cheerful in her old age, and contented to educate her three grandchildren later in life. The name Liszt would be meal or flour in English; so that Frank Flour might have been his unromantic cognomen; a difference from Liszt Ferencz, with its accompanying battle-cry of Eljen! In his son Adam Liszt hoped to realize his own frustrated musical dreams. A prodigy of a prodigious sort, the comet and the talent of Franz were mixed up by the superstitious. A gypsy predicted that the lad would return to his native village rich, honored, and in a glass house (coach). This he did. In Oedenburg, during the summer of 1903, I visited, at an hour or so distant, the town of Eisenstadt and the village of Raiding (or Reiding). In the latter is the house where Liszt was born. The place, which can hardly have changed much since the boyhood of Liszt, is called Dobrjàn in Hungarian. I confess I was not impressed and was glad to get back to Oedenburg and civilization. In this latter spot there is a striking statue of the composer.

It is a thrice-told tale that several estimable Hungarian magnates raised a purse for the boy, sent him with his father to Vienna, where he studied the piano with pedagogue Carl Czerny, that indefatigable fabricator of finger studies, and in theory with Salieri. He was kissed by the aged Beethoven on the forehead—Wotan saluting young Siegfried—though Schindler, ami de Beethoven, as he dubbed himself, denied this significant historical fact. But Schindler later pitched into Liszt for his Beethoven interpretations, hotly swearing that they were the epitome of unmusical taste. The old order changeth, though not old prejudices. Liszt waxed in size, technique, wisdom. Soon he was given up as hopelessly in advance of his teachers. Wherever he appeared they hailed him as a second Hummel or a second Beethoven. And he improvised. That settled his fate. He would surely become a composer. He went to Paris, was known as le petit Litz, and received everywhere. He became the rage; but was refused admittance to the conservatoire. He composed an opera, "Don Sancho," the score of which luckily disappeared. Then an event big with consequences was experienced by the youth—he lost his father in 1827. (His mother survived her husband until 1866.) He gave up concert performances as too precarious and manfully began teaching in Paris. He fell in love with a girl of noble family, Mlle. Saint-Criq, and was quickly informed that a piano teacher was no match for one of her birth and prospects. He took the lesson to heart so seriously that he languished for a year indifferent to everybody and everything. The revolution started his pulse to beating again and he composed a revolutionary symphony. He became a lover of humanity, a socialist, a follower of Saint-Simon, even of the impossible Père Prosper Enfantin. His friend and adviser was Lamenais, whose "Paroles d'un Croyant" had estranged him from Rome. (A wonderful, unhappy man.) Liszt read poetry and philosophy, absorbed all the fashionable frenzied formulas and associated with the Romanticists. He met Chopin, and they became as twin brethren. François Mignet, author of "A History of the French Revolution," said to the Princess Cristina Belgiojoso, of Liszt: "In the brain of this young man reigns great confusion." No wonder. He was playing the piano, composing, teaching, studying the philosophers and mingling with enthusiastic idealists, who burnt their straw before they moulded their bricks. As Francis Hackett wrote of the late Lord Acton, Liszt suffered from an "intellectual log-jam." But the currents of events soon released him.

He met the Countess d'Agoult in the brilliant heyday of his artistic success. She was beautiful, accomplished, though her contemporaries declare she was not of a truthful nature. She was born Marie Sophie de Flavigny at Frankfort-on-Main, in 1805. Her father was the Vicomte de Flavigny who had married the daughter of Simon Moritz Bethmann, a rich banker, who originally came from Amsterdam and were converted Hebrews. She had literary ability, was proud of having seen Goethe, and in 1827 she married Comte Charles d'Agoult. But social sedition was in the air. The misunderstood women—no new thing—became the fashion. George Sand was changing her lovers with every new book she wrote, and Madame, the Countess d'Agoult—to whom Chopin dedicated his first group of Études—began to write, began to yearn for fame and adventures. Liszt appeared. He seems to have been the pursued. Anyhow, they eloped. In honor he couldn't desert the woman, and they made Geneva their temporary home. She had in her own right 20,000 francs a year income; it cost Liszt exactly 300,000 francs annually to keep up an establishment such as the lady had been accustomed to—he earned this, a tidy amount, for those days, by playing the piano all over Europe. Madame d'Agoult bore him three children: Blandine, Cosima, and Daniel. The first named married Emile Ollivier, Napoleon's war minister—still living at the present writing—in 1857. She died in 1862. Cosima married Hans Von Bülow, her father's favorite pupil in 1857; later she went off with Richard Wagner, married him, to her father's despair—principally because she had renounced her religion in so doing—and to-day is Wagner's widow. Daniel Liszt, his father's hope, died December, 1859, at the age of twenty. Liszt had legitimatized the birth of his children, had educated them, had dowered the girls, and, all three, they proved his direct sorrow.

He quarrelled with Madame d'Agoult and they parted bad friends. Under the pen name of Daniel Stern she attacked Liszt in her souvenirs and novels. He forgave her. They met in Paris once, in the year 1860. He gently told her that the title of her souvenirs should have been "Poses et Mensonges." She wept. Tragic comedians both. They were bored with each other, their union recalling the profound reflection of Flaubert, that Emma Bovary rediscovered in adultery all the platitudes of marriage. Perhaps other ladies had supervened. Like Byron, Liszt was the sentimental hero of the day, a Chateaubriand René of the keyboard. Balzac put him in a book, so did Sand. All the painters and sculptors, Delaroche and Ary Scheffer among the others, made his portrait. Nevertheless, his head was not turned, and when, after an exile of a few years, Thalberg had conquered Paris in his absence, he returned and engaged in an ivory duel, at the end worsting his rival. Thalberg was the first pianist in Europe, every one cried. And the Princess Belgiojoso calmly remarked that Liszt was the only one. After witnessing the Paderewski worship of yesterday nothing related of Liszt should surprise us.

In the meantime, Paganini had set his brain seething. Chopin, Paganini, and Berlioz were the predominating artistic influences in his life; from the first he learned to know the exotic, learned the resources of the instrument, and the value of national folk-song flavor; from the second he gained the inspiration for his transcendental technique; from the third, orchestral color and "new paths" were indicated to his ambitious spirit. He never tired, he always said there would be plenty of time to loaf in eternity. His pictures were everywhere, he became a kind of Flying Hungarian to the sentimental Sentas of those times. He told Judith Gautier that the women loved themselves in him. Modest man! What charm was in his playing an army of auditors have told us. Heine called Thalberg a king, Liszt a prophet, Chopin a poet, Herz an advocate, Kalkbrenner a minstrel, Madame Pleyel a Sibyl and Doehler—a pianist. Scudo wrote that Thalberg's scales were like pearls on velvet, the scales of Liszt the same, but the velvet was hot! Louis Ehlert, no mean observer, said he possessed a quality that neither Tausig nor any virtuoso before or succeeding him ever boasted—the nearest approach, perhaps, was Rubinstein—namely: a spontaneous control of passion that approximated in its power to nature . . . and an incommensurable nature was his. He was one among a dozen artists who made Europe interesting during the past century. Slim, handsome, brown of hair and blue-eyed, with the years he grew none the less picturesque; his mane was white, his eyes became blue-gray, his pleasant baritone voice a brumming bass. There is a portrait in the National Gallery by Lorenzo Lotto, that of Prothonotary Giuliano, which suggests him, and in the Burne-Jones picture, Merlin and Vivien, there is certainly a transcript of his features. A statue by Foyatier, in the Louvre, of Spartacus is really the head of the pianist. As Abbé, Liszt was none the less fascinating; for his admirers he wore his soutane with a difference.

Useless to relate the Thousand-and-One Nights of music, triumphs, and intrigues in his life. When the Countess d'Agoult returned to her family a council, presided over by her husband's brother, exonerated the pianist, and his behavior was pronounced to be that of a gentleman! Surely the Comic Muse must have chuckled at this. Like Wagner, Franz Liszt was a tragic comedian of prime order. He knew to the full the value of his electric personality. Sincere in art he could play the grand seigneur, the actor, the priest, and diplomat at will. Pose he had to, else abandon the profession of piano virtuoso. He bitterly objected to playing the rôle of a performing poodle, and once publicly insulted a Czar, who dared to talk while the greatest pianist in the world played. He finally grew tired of Paris, of public life. He had been loved by such various types of women as George Sand—re-christened by Baudelaire as the Prudhomme of immorality; delightful epigram!—by Marie Du Plessis, the Lady of the Camellias, and by that astounding adventuress, Lola Montez. How many others only a Leporello catalogue would show.

His third artistic period began in 1847, his sojourn at Weimar. It was the most attractive and fruitful of all. From 1848 to 1861 the musical centre of Germany was this little town immortalized by Goethe. There the world flocked to hear the first performance of Lohengrin and other Wagner operas. A circle consisting of Raff, Von Bülow, Tausig, Cornelius, Litolff, with Berlioz and Rubinstein (in 1854) as an occasional visitor, to mention a tithe of famous names, surrounded Liszt. His elective affinity—to use Goethe's phrase—was the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein, who with her child had deserted the usual brutal and indifferent husband in fashionable romances. Her influence upon Liszt's character has been disputed, but unwarrantably. Together they wrote his chief literary works, the study of Chopin—the princess supplying the upholstered local color, and the book on Hungarian gypsy music, which contains a veiled attack on the Jews, for which Liszt was blamed. The Sayn-Wittgenstein was an intense, narrow nature—she has been called a "slightly vulgar aristocrat"—and one of her peculiarities was seeing in almost every one of artistic or intellectual prominence Hebraic traits or lineaments. Years before the Geyer and the Leipsic Judengasse story came out she unhesitatingly pronounced Richard Wagner of Semitic origin; she also had her doubts about Berlioz, and several others. The Lisztian theory of gypsy music consists, as Dannreuther says, in the merit of a labored attempt to prove the existence of something like a gypsy epic in terms of music, the fact being that Hungarian gypsies merely play Hungarian popular tunes in a fantastic and exciting manner, but have no music that can properly be called their own. Liszt was a facile writer and did more with his pen for Wagner than Wagner's own turbid writings. But a great writer he was not—many-sided as he was. It was unkind, however, on the part of Wagner to say to a friend that Cosima had more brains than her father. If she has, Bayreuth, since her husband's death, has not proved it. Wagner, when he uttered this, was probably in the ferment of a new passion—having quite recovered from his supposedly eternal love for Mathilde Wesendonck.

Liszt had first met his princess in February, 1847, at Kiew, Russia. She was born Ivanowska, in 1819. She became a favorite at the Weimar court with the reigning sovereigns, and Maria-Pavlowna. A masterful woman, though far from beautiful, she so controlled and ordered Liszt's life that he quite shed his Bohemian skin, composed much and as Kapellmeister produced many novelties of the new school. They lived on a hill in a house called the Altenburg, not a very princely abode, and there Liszt accomplished the major portion of his works for orchestra, his masses and piano concertos. There too Richard Wagner, a revolutionist, wanted by the Dresden police, came in 1849—from May 19th to 24th—disguised, carrying a forged passport, poor, miserable. Liszt secured him lodgings and gave him a banquet at the Altenburg, attended by Tausig, Von Bülow, Gille, Draeseke, Gottschalk and others, nineteen in all. Wagner behaved badly, insulted his host and the guests. He was left in solitude until Liszt insisted on his apologizing for his rude manners—which he did with a bad grace. John F. Runciman has said that Liszt ought to have done even more for Wagner than he did—or words to that effect; just so, and there is no doubt that the noble man has put the world in his debt by piloting the music dramatist into safe harbor; but, while ingratitude is no crime according to the new code of immoralism, there seems a limit to amiability, and in Liszt's case his amiability amounted to weakness. He could never say "No" to Wagner (nor to a pretty woman). He understood and forgave the Mime nature in Wagner for the sake of his Siegfried side. There was no Mime in Liszt, nothing small nor hateful, although he could at times play the benevolent, ironic Mephisto. And in his art he mirrored this quality to perfection—the Mephistopheles of his Faust symphony.

Intrigues pursued him in his capacity as court musical director. The Princess Maria Pavlowna died June, 1859; the following October Princess Marie, daughter of Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein, married the Prince Hohenlohe, and Liszt, after an opera by Peter Cornelius was hissed resigned his post. He remembered Goethe and his resignation—caused by a trained dog at the same theatre. But he didn't leave Weimar until August 17, 1861, joining the Princess at Rome. The scandal of the attempted marriage there with the princess again riveted the eyes of the world upon Liszt. His very warts became notorious. Some say that Cardinal Antonelli, instigated by Polish relatives of the princess, upset the affair when the pair were literally on the eve of approaching the altar; some believe that the wily Liszt had set in motion the machinery; but the truth is that, at the advice of the cardinal Prince Hohenlohe, his closest friend, the marriage scheme was dropped. When the husband of the princess died there was no further talk of matrimony. Instead, Liszt took minor orders, concentrated his attention on church music, and henceforth spent his year between Rome, Weimar, and Budapest. To Weimar he had returned (1869) at the cordial invitation of the archduke, who allotted to his use a little house in the park, the Hofgärtnerei. There every summer he received pupils from all parts of the world, gratuitously advising them, helping them from his now impoverished purse, and, incidentally, being admired by a new generation of musical enthusiasts, particularly those of the feminine gender. There were lots of scandals, and the worthy burghers of the town shook their heads at the goings-on of the Lisztianer. The old man fell under many influences, some of them sinister. He seldom saw Richard or Cosima Wagner, though he had attended the opening of Bayreuth in 1876. On that occasion Wagner publicly paid a magnificent tribute to the genius and noble friendship of Liszt. It atoned for a wilderness of previous neglect and ingratitude.

With Wagner's death in 1883 his hold on things began to weaken. He taught, he travelled, he never failed to pay the princess an annual visit at Rome. She had immured herself behind curtained windows, and to the light of waxen tapers led the life of a mystic, also smoked the blackest of cigars. She became a theologian in petticoats and wrote numerous and inutile books about pin-points in matters ecclesiastical. No doubt she still loved Liszt, for she set a spy on him at Weimar and thus kept herself informed as to how much cognac he consumed daily, how many pretty girls had asked for a lock of his silvery hair, also the name of the latest aspirant to his affections.

What a brilliant coterie of budding artists surrounded him. D'Albert, Friedheim, Joseffy, Rosenthal, Reisenauer, Grieg, Edward MacDowell, Stavenhagen, Sofie Menter, Toni Raab, Siloti, Pachmann, Saint-Saëns, Rubinstein—the latter not as pupil—and other distinguished names in the annals of piano playing. Liszt's health broke down, yet he persisted in visiting London during the summer of 1886, where he was received like a demigod by Queen Victoria, and the musical world; he had been earlier in Paris, where a mass of his was sung with success. His money affairs were in a tangle; once in receipt of an income that enabled him to throw money away to any whining humbug, he complained at the last that he had no home of his own, no income—he had not been too shrewd in his dealings with music publishers—and little ready cash for travelling expenses. The princess needed her own rents, and Liszt was hardly a charity pensioner. During the Altenburg years, the Glanzzeit at Weimar, her income had sufficed for both, as Liszt was earning no money from concert tours. But at the end despite his devoted disciples, he was the very picture of a deserted, desolate old hero. And he had given away fortunes, and played fortunes at benefit concerts into the coffers of cities overtaken by fire or flood or in need of musical monuments to Beethoven or Hummel. Surely, this is the seamy side of success. "Wer aber wird nun Liszt helfen?" This half-humorous, half-pathetic cry of his had its tragic significance.

Liszt last touched the key-board July 19th, 1886, at Colpach, Luxemburg, in the castle of Munkaczy, the Hungarian painter. Feeble as he must have been, there was a supernatural aureole about his music that caused his hearers to weep. (Fancy the piano-forte inciting to tears!) He played his favorite Liebestraum, the Chant Polonais from the "Glanes de Woronice" (the name of the Polish estate of the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein), and the sixteenth of his Soirées de Vienne. He went on to Bayreuth, in company with a persistent young Parisian lady—the paramount passion not quite extinguished—attended a performance of "Tristan and Isolde," through which he slept from absolute exhaustion; though he did not fail to acknowledge in company with Cosima Wagner the applause at the close. He went at once to bed never to leave it alive. He died of lung trouble on the night of July 31st or the early hour of August 1, 1886, and his last word is said to have been "Tristan." He was buried in haste—that he might not interfere with the current Wagner festival—and, no doubt, was mourned at leisure. His princess survived him a year; this sounds more romantic than it is. A new terror was added to death by his ugly tomb, designed by his grandson, Siegfried Wagner; also a composer, as well as an amateur architect.

THE MIRROR-SELF

By Edith M. Thomas

IN Childhood's world, of a rainy day,
When nothing, outside, the child could do,
There still remained one weirdest play,
Which I played till I shivered through and through!

Two pieces of mirror, and I between—
There was the Self that smiled as I smiled;
Beyond, a second—a third—was seen,
And last, oh, last, was an Elfin Child!

Each face in the mirror (mirrored, too)
Gazed at its image—and all at me;
But each reflection less like me grew—
And I shut my eyes, that I might not see!

. . . .

Those broken shards they were cast away,
Dropped, with so many a childish game.
Yet, still, at the mirror-charm I play—
With no glass at all, it is just the same;

For Thought, now, serves me mirror-wise;
And, whenever within I list to gaze,
There, frankly looking me in the eyes,
Is the wonted Self, of my current days!

But, back of that wonted Self of mine
(Just as it happened so long ago),
Are the Other Selves; and, last in the line,
Is the Mocking One I do not know.

CLEVELAND'S ADMINISTRATIONS

By James Ford Rhodes

I

PURPOSE writing two articles on Cleveland, and in my treatment of his two administrations I shall not confine myself to the chronological order, but shall develop each principal topic by itself. Entirely logical as this method would seem in the consideration of any other President, it needs perhaps a word of apology in the case of Cleveland, whose two terms, unlike those of any other re-elected President, were not continuous. The first Democrat to occupy the White House since 1861, he served his first term from 1885 to 1889. In 1888 he was defeated by Harrison, but, four years later, he in turn was the victor and served his second term from 1893 to 1897. In his "Presidential Problems," published seven years after he had laid down the responsibilities of office, he considered, as presumably his most important work, four subjects: his contest in 1886 with the Republican Senate over the suspensions of officials; his action during the Chicago strike of 1894; his preservation of the gold standard, and his conduct of the Venezuelan boundary controversy. These last three fall within his second administration, which is, undoubtedly, the more important of the two. For my part, though of his mind in respect to three of these subjects, I regard two others as surpassing in importance his quarrel with the Senate about the offices, viz., his action for the reform of the civil service and for the reduction of the tariff.

To begin, then, with civil service reform: No account of this momentous struggle is adequate without reference to what Ostrogorski calls its Magna Charta, the act of January 16, 1883. This was drawn up by Dorman B. Eaton, an early and intelligent servant of the cause, and introduced into Congress by Senator George H. Pendleton, who zealously urged its enactment. It required open competitive examinations as a requisite for admission into certain classes of the public service, made a classification of a number of offices mandatory, and empowered the President to continue the classification, that is, to extend the operation of the law to additional places in the civil service. It forbade political assessments on office-holders, and established a non-partisan Civil Service Commission, whose duty was to make rules for carrying the act into effect and in general to look to its enforcement. President Arthur appointed Eaton as head of the commission and correctly enforced the law, so that when Cleveland came to the White House there were 15,573 persons in the classified service.

It now seems curious that the question was ever raised whether or not Cleveland was advancing the cause of civil service reform, but a consideration of his attitude under two aspects may enable us to understand the varying opinion before it settled down to a final judgment. Did he enforce steadfastly the Pendleton law? Was he actuated by the spirit of the reform in dealing out the offices beyond the classified service? To the first question there is only one answer. President Cleveland gave a faithful and honest enforcement of the law. But the other matter demands some discussion.

As head of the municipal government of Buffalo, Cleveland had been known as the "veto mayor"; as governor of New York, he had shown himself, by precept and example, a good civil service reformer. The Mugwumps, former Republicans who had bolted the nomination of Blaine and who had proved themselves an important factor in his first election, were warm advocates of the reform and entertained high hopes of the new President. The different civil service reform associations throughout the country and the National Civil Service Reform League included in their membership many Mugwumps, from whose influence largely their deliberations derived a highly critical tone. These bodies not only watched closely the enforcement of the Pendleton act but made their lofty ideal of the duty of a reform President to apply rigorously to his disposition of offices that did not fall under the operation of this law. When Cleveland was inaugurated there were about five thousand presidential offices, whose incumbents were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and there were also, in round numbers, forty-nine thousand fourth-class post-offices to which appointments were made by the Postmaster-General, who, of course, is under the authority of the President. While some of the Democratic leaders had warmly advocated civil service reform, the rank and file of the party believed that "to the victors belong the spoils" was good Democratic doctrine, and, after the inauguration ceremonies were over, they expected the turning out of Republicans to begin and the faithful and long-suffering, who had waited twenty-four years for their share of the good things of the government, to be rewarded. Though aware that Cleveland was a so-called civil service reformer, they failed to realize either the meaning of the doctrine or the sincerity of its champion; for, as one of their Senators (Eustis) expressed it, they felt that the civil service reform for which they had voted at the presidential election meant the turning out of office of Republicans and putting honest Democrats in their places.

Before his inauguration, however, Cleveland had gone on record. In his Christmas Day (1884) reply to a letter of the National Civil Service Reform League, which he had invited, he said that he should enforce the Pendleton law "in good faith and without evasion," and he outlined his proposed course with regard to offices which, though not within the letter of the law, were at the same time unrelated to the political policy of an administration. Reference was here made to district attorneys, collectors and surveyors of customs, and other specified civil officers who, by an act passed in 1820, had a four years' tenure of office; a later statute (1836) placed under this rule the first-, second-, and third-class postmasters of the present classification. These Cleveland said he should not remove until the expiration of their terms unless they had failed to be "decent public servants" and had proved "offensive partisans." In his inaugural address he repeated, in more general terms, this outline of his administrative policy. George William Curtis, the president of the National League, at their annual meeting (August, 1885) made a plea for the repeal of the four-year tenure law, in which he undoubtedly represented an opinion largely held among reformers; and while this law may at the present time be proving obstructive of the effort to extend the merit system to the class of offices that it covers, yet, in the change of party control from Republican to Democratic in 1885, it was a help to Cleveland in his effort for good administration. At that time, according to both theory and practice of Democrat, Whig, and Republican since Andrew Jackson, practically every office, except the 15,573 in the classified service, belonged, by the decision of the people in the preceding November, to the Democratic party. Cleveland's construction of the four-year tenure law gave him time to inquire, to investigate, and to reflect before he made a large number of new appointments, and this opportunity for leisurely proceeding was of immense advantage, as is evident when we consider Lincoln's, Pierce's, and Taylor's trials on their accession to office.

When the Democratic politicians and party workers, who had waited twenty-four years for an inning, came to understand the construction which Cleveland put upon his own words, they were grievously disappointed, and disappointment was soon followed by rage. Within two months from his inauguration he had lost popularity and standing in his party. The President, said the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has not, so far as I know, a friend among Democrats except perhaps some one whom he has appointed to office. Nor were men of the Democratic rank and file who had no desire for place, especially pleased. They would have liked him to put in force "the good old Democratic doctrine" of Andrew Jackson; but now, having exuberantly rejoiced over their victory in November, they were puzzled that no effort was made to gather its fruits. Senator Vance, of North Carolina, was indignant at the indifference and even disrespect with which he was treated by the President with regard to the patronage of his own State, but he saw the humorous side of the situation well enough to be reminded of one of his own legal cases which concerned a small estate left by an old man to his two sons. The settlement was repeatedly put off by the court, to the disgust of the heirs, until at last the elder son broke out: "Durned if I ain't almost sorry the old man died."

"In the first year and a half of my administration," said Cleveland to a New York World reporter, "the same battle was fought day after day." A study of the conditions enables us to realize this and to sympathize with the President. At first the reformers were pretty well satisfied. The reappointment of Henry G. Pearson, the efficient Republican postmaster of New York City, and the reinstatement of Silas W. Burt, another Republican, in the naval office, were considered excellent moves as showing high regard for the merit system; and such selections were evidence of resistance to an enormous amount of pressure from political friends and supporters. The appointments of a Democratic business man* for collector of the port of New York and of a Democrat, who had declared for reform, as surveyor, and the advancement to the appraisership of a deputy and expert, were also proof of the President's sincerity. When Eaton tendered his resignation as Civil Service Commissioner (July 28, 1885) he gave testimony of the faithful enforcement of the Pendleton law and of the rules made in accordance therewith. But as time went on and removals of Republicans and appointments of Democrats, outside of the classified service, were made, especially in the Post-Office, Treasury, and Interior Departments, the reformers became lukewarm in approval of their President. Stating that during the first six months of Cleveland's administration 524 out of 2,300 presidential post-offices had received new postmasters and 6,309 changes among 49,000 fourth-class postmasters had been made, the Civil Service Record said with truth, "This is something of a sweep though far from a clean sweep." Working on the theory that as fast as vacancies occurred or could be made, Democrats should replace Republicans, it was natural and easy for a zealous Democratic Secretary or Postmaster-General to regard a Republican office-holder as an unworthy official and offensive partisan, and, helped by Democratic Senators and Congressmen, to wield with considerable effect the political axe. There was much available administrative talent in the United States, which was by no means confined to the Republican party, and competent Democrats might have been had for the lucrative positions, had Senators and Representatives based their recommendations on merit instead of on personal fealty and party work. They followed, instead, the custom which had been in force since Andrew Jackson's time, with the result that many bad appointments were made. The Indianapolis post-office under the management of the new Democratic postmaster was an example of offensive partisanship. Senator Gorman, of Maryland, was one of the evil geniuses of the Cleveland administration; his influence was potent, and his recommendations were generally bad. The Federal service in Baltimore was filled with spoilsmen and ward-heelers, and it is charged that even criminals found places, so that Maryland became the worst blot on the President's record as a civil service reformer.

Cleveland complained bitterly of having been deceived by "lying and treacherous representations." For instance, after his appointment of a certain territorial judge, wherein he had been influenced largely by a petition in the man's favor, he was surprised to receive a letter from one of the signers, a politician, saying that the community and especially those who had put their names to the petition had received advice of the appointment with "astonishment and regret, if not pain." I signed the petition, he went on to say, "thinking it would never be considered, and not for one moment believing the appointment was possible." For the man was utterly unfit for the place.

The enthusiastic approval of the civil service reformers during the first few months of the administration was succeeded by criticism which Cleveland felt keenly. As early as September, 1885, he showed his irritation in a letter to Eaton, in which he spoke of "the supercilious self-righteousness" of certain civil service reformers who "discredit every effort not in exact accord with their attenuated ideas, decry with carping criticism the labor of those actually in the field of reform, and, ignoring the conditions which bound and qualify every struggle for a radical improvement in the affairs of government, demand complete and immediate perfection." In his annual message of December, 1886, he returned to the subject again and spoke of "the misguided zeal of impracticable friends." This brought forth an emphatic letter from Carl Schurz, who had been a warm supporter of Cleveland and was now a sympathetic coadjutor of Curtis. "Until recently," he wrote, "the worst things laid to your charge were construed as mere errors of judgment. . . . But . . . this confiding belief has been seriously shaken. Your attempt to please both reformers and spoilsmen has failed. I warned you more than once that your principal danger was to sit down between two chairs. I am afraid you are virtually there now." This letter and the persistence of the two men in their opposite views caused a break in the intimate relations between Cleveland and Schurz, which had existed since the year of his candidacy for President. The President's exasperation was so great that he forbade a prominent custom-house official to attend the annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League, in 1887. He afterward apologized for this order, confessing that, when he sent it, he was greatly irritated.

* The collector turned out to be a poor selection; he was unbusinesslike in his administration.

Doubtless reformers should hold steadfast to their highest ideals—an obligation which probably justifies the criticism by Curtis and Schurz, who were broad-minded men; Schurz, moreover, had a rather good comprehension of Western sentiment, now so important a political force. Nevertheless, Cleveland had both a better knowledge and saner view of the conditions. He felt that for enduring results he must educate the people to a belief in the practicability of the reform. Like Lincoln, although in a much less degree, he understood the plain people. Living for a number of years as a young man at a hotel in Buffalo, a favorite resort for drovers and farmers, he learned from them the same lessons that Lincoln got from the loungers in the country taverns of Illinois. The history of the progress of civil service reform shows that Cleveland was right in his belief that in 1885 the doctrine was so unfamiliar to the public mind that its application must be gradual, cautious, and moderate. If the whole constituency had been that which Curtis and Schurz represented, the educated and cultivated men of the country, he might well have pursued a different course. It must also be borne in mind that Cleveland was a sturdy Democrat, and felt that the education of his own party, difficult as it was under the circumstances, was necessary to sustain him in the work of reform.

James Russell Lowell, who, as he himself said, "did divine Lincoln earlier than most men of the Brahmin caste," had now a just appreciation of Cleveland. He was our minister to England at the time of Cleveland's election and was willing to stay on, but the President naturally desired to give his place to a Democrat. On his return home he went to Washington (August, 1885) and paid his respects to Cleveland, drawing forth a hearty laugh by saying, "I come to you like St. Denis, with the head you have cut off under my arm." "Don't you think," Lowell asked at a dinner to Dorman B. Eaton (December, 1885), "it would be better and make for the progress of civil service reform if equality—I mean numerical equality—could be introduced into the public service before President Cleveland's term expires? I am very strongly of that opinion. I certainly never objected to my own removal. It was certainly necessary." At the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of Harvard College (November, 1886) Lowell, looking directly at Cleveland, ended his oration: "'Justum ac tenacem propositi virum,' who knows how to withstand the 'civium ardor prava jubentium.' He has left the helm of State to be with us here and so long as it is intrusted to his hands we are sure that, should the storm come, he will say with Seneca's pilot, 'O, Neptune, you may save me if you will; you may sink me if you will; but whatever happen, I shall keep my rudder true.'" The audience knew that "civium ardor prava jubentium" meant in this case "politicians yelling for spoils," and gave orator and President their hearty applause. It may be that Lowell had in mind the emotion Cleveland betrayed at the time of this felicitous reference when he wrote in a private letter, "To me Cleveland's personality is very simpatico. He is a truly American type of the best kind—a type very dear to me, I confess."

Let us now sum up the progress of civil service reform under Cleveland's first administration. The Pendleton law was much strengthened and may be said to have been firmly established. While the sections of the law regarding political assessments might be easily evaded, the assessment of office-holders in Washington had wholly ceased and the practice had elsewhere largely disappeared. Through extensions as well as in the ordinary course of national growth, Cleveland left 27,380 places in the classified service against the 15.573 which he found there when he took his seat. His work in the unclassified service shows that in becoming a reformer he had not ceased to be a Democrat. In the presidential post-offices he had made practically a "clean sweep"; and, taking no account of appointments due to decease or "vacancy," he had made changes in nearly one-half of the other presidential offices. Moreover, almost all of the fourth-class post-offices had been filled by Democrats. There were likewise inconsistencies in his displacements; mistakes were made, and, in some cases, injustice was done. Yet it is true, as Curtis said in his frankly critical annual address of 1887, "Under this administration much has been gained for reform." And Charles F. Adams wrote judiciously (July, 1892): "Upon the issue of a reformed civil service, Cleveland showed himself as much in advance of both parties as it was wise or prudent for the recognized leader of one of those parties to be."

Cleveland entered upon his second term under favorable conditions for civil service reform. Though Harrison, in respect to the unclassified service, had not been as sound as his predecessor, he had, in the classified service, given strength to the movement and had made an important contribution to its progress in the appointment of Theodore Roosevelt as member of the Civil Service Commission. Cleveland was now thoroughly independent. His third nomination had been emphatically demanded by the people and his election was a triumph. His party owed him more than he owed his party. He was the most popular man in the country and seemed to stand in the position of a great leader, needing only to urge a policy to have it adopted, yet the reformers were not so well satisfied with the first year of his second administration as they had been with the same period of the first. This was partly due to his not giving the same attention to appointments that he had given four years previously. He was now occupied with weightier matters and left the disposition of the offices mainly to his subordinates. Josiah Quincy, who had been regarded as favorable to civil service reform and had received the appointment of Assistant Secretary of State, was a diligent wielder of the political axe. Indeed, Schurz, who had become president of the National Civil Service Reform League on the death of Curtis, said in his annual address of 1894: "No spoilsman in that office had ever turned over the consular service from one party to the other with greater thoroughness and despatch." Quincy defended himself by saying that he had turned out bad and put in good men and Cleveland stood by his subordinate with Grant-like fidelity and tenacity. The Treasury, Interior, and Post-Office Departments were unable to withstand the eager importunities of office-seekers and were censured at length by the reformers. The Postmaster-General had their confidence, but his assistant so swung the axe among the fourth-class postmasters that, during the first year, he exceeded by 1,143 Harrison's record of changes for the same period, which were made by a master of the politician's art (the number under Harrison was over 24,000; on percentages the Democratic showing is better, 34 to the Republican 37; the difference is owing to growth). During the first year of the new administration Cleveland changed 1,720 presidential post-offices to Harrison's 1,698 although, because of the increase in the number of offices, his percentage was 53 to Harrison's 65. Yet this large number of displacements is evidence that Cleveland was employing the patronage to advance his financial and tariff policies. During the first nine months of his administration, the reformers were so sharp and persistent in their censure, that we must deem charitable even the remark of the Springfield Republican: "President Cleveland's civil service record to date is a maze of theatrical contradictions" (December 2, 1893). Exasperated at the fault-finding, the President could not refrain from retort, and, in his first annual message, spoke of "the querulous impracticability of many self-constituted guardians" of civil service reform.

I am not concerned with striking a balance between the reformers' criticisms and the President's defence. Despite Quincy's old-fashioned and ruthless decapitations and the partisan activity of the Treasury, Interior, and Post-Office Departments, Cleveland, in both public and private utterances, remained faithful to the principle of civil service reform. It must be remembered that twelve years previously all these removals and new appointments would have been considered a matter of course and that the quickened public conscience was largely due to the civil service reform associations, to the representative body, the National League, and to Grover Cleveland. The National League was fortunate in its first two presidents, Curtis and Schurz, who, to their other strong qualities, joined a power of literary expression, so that they had the ear of the whole public as well as of the believers in reform.

It is fortunate for Cleveland that the decision does not rest on the written word, for his ponderous and labored sentences in contrast with Curtis's and Schurz's telling statements would surely lose him the case. When good and true men fall out, the lover of righteousness may well be puzzled, but the historian has an advantage over statesman and reformer in his knowledge of the end. The backslidings due to "offensive partisanship" bulk small in comparison with the impetus Cleveland gave to good administration by his work for the classified service. He retained Theodore Roosevelt as member of the Civil Service Commission; the two worked together in harmony, and the President was keenly sensible of his loss when Roosevelt thought a higher duty called him to New York. During 1894 Cleveland added 5,468 places to the classified service, and next year made several extensions and revisions of the rules, all in the line of an enlargement of the merit system. He issued an order which required the filling of vacancies of a certain grade in the consular service by persons of proved capacity and fitness. During his last year he made a general revision of the rules which added to the classified service 32,095 new places. On his second accession to office he had found 42,928 places under the civil service rules; he left 86,932, of which only 1,513 were due to growth. Truly did he say in his last annual message: "A most radical and sweeping extension was made by executive order dated the 6th day of May, 1896, and, if fourth-class postmasters are not included in the statement, it may be said that practically all positions contemplated by the civil service law are now classified." Schurz was almost ready to say nunc dimittis.

In conclusion, it may be safely affirmed that Cleveland did more for the cause of civil service reform than any President except Roosevelt, whose work both as commissioner and as President mark him as the chief promoter of this phase of good government; but Cleveland's task in his first administration was the more difficult.

Cleveland was not as successful in his effort to reform the tariff as in his work toward the reform of the civil service. The one might be accomplished by executive action; for the other he had to depend upon Congress and he was not entirely happy in his influence on legislative action. As soon as he was established in his office, he found himself confronted by the fact of a formidable surplus lying in the treasury. The excess of revenue over expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1885, was sixty-three millions and for the next year ninety-four millions. In his first two annual messages he stated the condition and urged a reduction in the revenue from customs, but Congress did not heed his recommendations. More money than was needed for the administration of the government continued to be collected and the hoard in the treasury grew. In the summer of 1887, Cleveland was so perturbed by the threatening financial evils, due to the constantly accumulating surplus, that he determined on the unprecedented course of devoting the whole of his annual message to the one subject. On December 6, 1887, confronted by another excess of revenue over expenditures, this time of one hundred and three millions, he presented his views to Congress in one of his most notable State papers, the most remarkable message Senators and Representatives had heard since the days of Lincoln. During the three years ending June 30, 1887, one hundred and thirty-eight millions had been contributed to the sinking fund by the calling in of outstanding three per cent bonds, these being payable at the option of the Government; in addition to the sinking fund requirements, nearly eighty millions of the surplus had been applied in the same manner. Since June 30, 1887, nearly nineteen millions, which retired all of the three per cent bonds, had also gone into the sinking fund. In the current fiscal year about twenty-eight millions had been used in the purchase of four and four and a half per cent bonds not yet due. Still the excess of revenue would, it was estimated, reach one hundred and thirteen millions and the surplus in the treasury on June 30, 1888, one hundred and forty millions. "Financial disturbance" was threatened; "schemes of public plunder" were invited. After dismissing some suggested measures for disposing of the surplus, Cleveland argued that the people ought to have relief by a reduction of taxation, but that the internal revenue taxes, being confined to tobacco and spirituous and malt liquors not "strictly speaking necessaries," should not be touched. The relief should come therefore from a reduction of the tariff. Care should be taken not to injure in any way the working-man and not to sacrifice any proper interest of the manufacturer. It is not a question of "protection and free trade," he said; "it is a condition which confronts us, not a theory."

The message with its direct and pertinent argument was certain to appeal to the plain people, yet the singling out of wool from among the raw materials for "a removal or reduction" of duty, though from the free-traders' stand-point strictly logical, was a political mistake. This is much to be regretted, as Cleveland's courage, in defining plainly an issue and standing forth as a leader of his party, is entitled to the large measure of commendation which it received at the time. But his intelligence did not equal his courage. As he himself had said in a previous message, "our farmers and agriculturists number nearly one-half of our population"; to carry a measure of tariff reform, they must be his chief reliance and the Western farmers already favored it. Yet his recommendation of free wool made of every farmer who owned a sheep a protectionist. The experience of political life and his study during the four years of his retirement proved illuminating, for, in his denunciation of the tariff bill framed by the Democratic Senate of 1894, he termed it an "inconsistent absurdity" that "the wool of the farmer be put on the free list and the protection of tariff taxation be placed around the iron ore and coal of corporations and capitalists." But it does not appear that in 1887 he took counsel with any one on the policy of such a message as he finally wrote. A conference of Independents in New York, among whom were George William Curtis, Carl Schurz, and E. L. Godkin, all three tariff reformers, sent him word that they thought it inexpedient to urge a reduction of the tariff until after the presidential campaign of 1888, as such a recommendation would imperil his own re-election and would be more politic at the beginning than at the end of a presidential term.

The House, with its Democratic majority of thirteen, passed a bill on the lines of the President's message, but the Senate, with its Republican majority of two, substituted for it a bill enforcing the policy of high protection. Neither became a law during Cleveland's administration. The contest was transferred from Congress to the country where the issue was clearly made between Cleveland and his policy and the Republican platform adopted by the convention which had nominated Harrison. McKinley reported the platform and read in his most eloquent tones: "We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection. . . . We condemn the proposition of the Democratic party to place wool on the free list." The national revenue should be reduced "by repealing the taxes upon tobacco" and "the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes," and, should these reductions not be sufficient, "we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system." Cleveland said in his letter accepting a unanimous renomination that our opponents offer to the people "free tobacco and free whiskey" while we propose to relieve them from "the undue and unnecessary burden of tariff taxation now resting upon them." Few students of history and economics will hesitate to assert that Cleveland's was the better economic and business policy, the one tending to the greatest good of the greatest number. But the country thought otherwise and elected Harrison. New York, which Cleveland had carried in 1884, was again the pivotal State; but now he lost it by thirteen thousand and Indiana as well by twenty-three hundred. It is generally conceded that the message of December, 1887, caused his defeat and it is not unlikely that the advocacy of free wool was the predominant factor. New York farmers owned one and a half million of sheep and produced annually six million seven hundred thousand pounds of wool. Indiana had over a million sheep producing five million pounds. The Oregon State election in June, an indication of November, gave a largely increased Republican majority; and this was a clear protest against the Democratic policy of free wool, the clip in that State being ten million pounds.

The Republican Congress under Harrison undertook the reduction of the surplus while giving adequate protection to American manufactures. McKinley in the House and Aldrich in the Senate were the leaders, and their efforts resulted in the McKinley bill, which was justly characterized as "protection run mad." The Republican legislators did not offer free whiskey, at which their platform had hinted, but they reduced the tax on tobacco and further, sacrificing a revenue of fifty-four millions, made raw sugar free. As free sugar would, however, ruin the sugar planters of Louisiana, a step backward in fiscal legislation was taken by giving a bounty of two cents per pound on all sugar produced in the United States. Lavish pensions legislation completed the obliteration of the surplus, so that on Cleveland's second accession to office, it was only two and a half millions, and the following year (ending June 30, 1894) there was a deficit of seventy millions, to which the panic of 1893 contributed in some measure. Fate had decreed that Cleveland should be tried by a varied experience; that he should grapple with a surplus during his first and with a deficit during his second administration, for neither of which was he responsible. Indeed it is obvious that had he been re-elected in 1888, there would have been no deficit in 1894. From the continual stormy scenes of his second administration I shall for the moment isolate his action concerning the tariff. This method will possess the advantage of brevity, even though failing to present a comprehensive view of the diverse conditions surrounding his efforts to carry out any single policy.

The country repudiated the McKinley bill in the congressional elections of 1890 by an emphatic Democratic landslide; the Democrats chose 235 members of the House to the Republicans' 88 and the Populists' 9. As the Senate remained Republican, no reduction of the tariff could be effected, but the election of 1892 resulted in a Democratic Senate as well as President and House, so that, for the first time since the vote of 1856, the Democrats had full control of the executive and legislative departments of the government. As the verdict of 1888 had moderately favored protection, so the elections of 1890 and 1892 had been unmistakable indications that the country demanded urgently a substantial downward revision of the tariff. The President and the House of Representatives were eager to carry out the will of the country and the House, under the leadership of William L. Wilson and with Cleveland's sympathetic co-operation, passed by a vote of 204 to 140 a bill (February 1, 1894) which, though notably defective in certain details, supplied, on the whole, an honest and consistent programme for reduction of the tariff, and deserved a fair trial. It had the striking and readily comprehensible merit of placing iron ore, coal, and lumber on the free list, the more doubtful advantage of free wool; it retained free sugar, the great boon of the McKinley act to the people (although now questionable as a revenue measure), but it repealed the sugar bounties.

The action of the Senate shows how strongly intrenched was the system of protection. While a majority of the Democratic Senators were willing to agree to the Wilson bill, a number of them were secretly opposed to it and two were open and determined in their opposition. These two, Gorman of Maryland and Brice of Ohio, were as good protectionists as McKinley and so convinced that the bill meant ruin to many manufacturing industries that they preferred no legislation whatever to any that did not safeguard certain interests. Gorman was a good parliamentary leader and, having both avowed and silent support in his party, he dictated the policy of the Democratic Senate and eventually that of Congress. "I can afford to oppose this bill and beat the President," he said to Andrew Carnegie, "but I cannot afford to oppose and be beaten by him." The open confidence of Carnegie and other Republican manufacturers in Gorman and Brice, ought to have aroused the suspicion and partisanship of the Democrats and Populists who were devoted to tariff reform, and incited them to resent dictation by two of their number and to demand that their majority of seven be employed to register the will of their party as presented in their platform, as declared at the polls, personified in their President, and as formulated by the House. That this was not the result was due to circumstances well illustrated by the remark of the London fish dealer: "I am in favor of free trade in everything but herring." The Senators from Maryland, West Virginia, and Alabama were against any bill placing coal and iron ore on the free list, and they were upheld by well-known Democratic magnates at the North who were largely interested in the production of these minerals. The Senators from Louisiana insisted that her sugar planters should not be sacrificed, and Senator Murphy of New York, who lived at Troy, demanded that the industry of his town be protected, and obtained a duty on linen collars and cuffs almost as high as that in the McKinley bill (McKinley bill thirty cents per dozen and forty per cent ad valorem; Wilson bill thirty-five per cent ad valorem; Senate bill thirty cents per dozen and thirty per cent ad valorem.) Gorman worked on these different local interests astutely and with marked success.

Thus far he framed his bill according to Republican precedents, but there was worse behind. The words of the President and of Wilson, and a mass of facts supporting their guarded utterances, indicate that the sugar schedule, which was rendered unduly favorable to the Sugar Trust, was secured by that corporation's method of indirect bribery and corruption.

The Senate made six hundred and thirty-four amendments to the House bill and then passed it by 39 to 34 (July 3, 1894). It went as usual to a conference and the decided disagreement between the House and the Senate was aggravated by a quarrel between the President and the Senate, which came to a head from Wilson's reading in the House a letter from Cleveland, in which he denounced the Senate bill as a disregard of Democratic pledges and an abandonment of principles to the extent of "party perfidy and party dishonor." The letter was not tactful but honest; bad politics, yet, if we take its measure not at the moment but in the long run, good statesmanship. It gave rise to an angry discussion in the Senate in which Gorman had the sympathy of most of his brother Democratic Senators and it seems to have strengthened his leadership. Had Cleveland understood Congress and possessed the art of facile negotiation that belonged to his successor, McKinley, he could undoubtedly have brought the contest between himself and Gorman to a drawn battle and so secured a better bill. He might, it is true, have been more flexible and serene, yet his bold grapple with the opponents in his own party is an inspiration now to those who wish to apply sound economic doctrine to the conduct of our national affairs.

The Committee of Conference wrangled for eleven days but failed to come to an agreement. A second conference was had. Gorman stood firm on the ground that it must be the Senate bill or nothing, and in the end compelled the House to surrender. This chapter of tariff reform ended ignobly. The bill that was passed was like the old Republican article, differing only in degree, except that wool and lumber were placed on the free list. Truly did Cleveland write in a public letter, "the livery of Democratic tariff reform has been stolen and worn in the service of Republican protection." Gorman was the father of the law posing as the conservative protector of American industries against what was regarded as the revolutionary designs of the President and the House. Yet if the history and traditions of the party and the platform of 1892, on which the Democrats came into possession of the government, are the test, the faithful Democrat is Cleveland, not Gorman.

The President pursued a dignified course. He could not sign a bill which he had denounced. If he vetoed it, the McKinley bill, which he deemed the worse of the two, remained on the statute book. He therefore allowed it to become a law without his signature (August 27, 1894).

·THE POINT OF VIEW·

DOUBTLESS, as was suggested in the August magazine, many phases of our pursuit of culture are folly, and it is true that in countless instances our search for beauty is confounded with the pleasures of the chase. Pages have been written about the skip-hop-and-jump of our progress through past centuries and across continents, and there is always more to tell. I once saw a tourist party of our fellow countrymen hurried through the Louvre, with an impatient cry on the part of the conductor: "Now, ladies, and gentlemen, you haven't time to stop to look at anything! Just walk on as fast as you can! This gallery is an eighth of a mile long!" It was only last summer that a motor-car was driven rapidly to the portal of Wells Cathedral; the American at the wheel jumped out, crying: "Now you do the inside, and we'll do the outside, and it won't take us more than fifteen minutes!" I am willing to admit, lest I seem to fail to understand that point of view with which I thoroughly disagree, that even funnier than our haste is the bewildering thoroughness of our search. "Through bush, through briar," we go at full tilt, some queer survival of the Puritan conscience leading us on in Puck fashion, and with a Puck-like plan, to treat with the same superficial conscientiousness art and architecture, history, music, all visible and invisible phases of human achievement. A friend of mine tells of an American lady who once rushed up to her in the Vatican, asking breathlessly: "Can you tell me—have I seen the Pantheon?" The response: "Madam, you must know that better than I," brought a second swift question: "Has it a hole in it?" The admission that it has a hole in it elicited a quick sigh of gratitude. Then, said the tourist, with the relieved air of one who has one dash the less to make,—then she had seen it. Perhaps the future will reveal to our inventive minds, a method of absorbing the value of the old masters by flying over them in aeroplanes, outdoing the motor-car in the matter of "making time" in the quest of the ideal, yet surely no phase of absurdity should shatter our faith in the validity of the quest. Search under all the grotesque manifestations of our passion for "going to all," and going to see all, and you cannot fail to feel the pathos of it, the blind, dumb, wistful sense that there is something in the world besides machinery, and modern improvements, and the thin and tinkling phases of our civilization. Subtract the vanity that leads many, the joy of being seen; eliminate the restlessness, the American desire for perpetual motion; discount the passion for doing as the others do, one of the most potent passions of our lives—disregard all this, and you have at the heart of this folk-wandering, something deeper, a sense of dissatisfaction with that which we have achieved, a profound striving of the instinct for perfection.

The Folly of Staying at Home.

How else, stranded between sea and sea, with no older and subtler civilization near to send us a deeper challenge, are we to acquire a sense of values? That we have worn out an intolerable deal of good shoe leather without fully acquiring it, I am ready to admit. I can still recall a vigorous western lady who loudly declaimed upon the deck of a returning steamer, that she had seen in her three months' journey, "all the big galleries in Europe," as she phrased it, Berlin, Dresden, Paris, London, and she had not seen any pictures that could for a moment compare with those at the art exhibition at Boulder, Colorado, the year before. Doubtless she was right, and for her the trail is long before she will find out wherein the difference consists, yet I thought that, in the loudness and the positiveness of her assertion lay some dim misgiving of real beauty, and a fear that all was not as she said in the world of art. We are still young, and have much to learn; it is fitting that we should trudge diligently to that dame-school where Europe sits and patiently teaches us the alphabet of the arts. It is at the shrines of dead genius, before the great pictures and the great cathedrals that we learn the failure of our own success, and in such sense of failure lies our only hope.

As for the assertion that it is folly to search out the places associated with the great, there are innumerable ways in which the sight of the eyes does mean "vision," and, standing where you can see the actual stream and meadow that the poet saw, you enter in wholly new fashion into his work. Meanings which escape you on the written page are made delicately clear by grass and tree and flower. For reasons that can never be fully explained, a glimpse of the ancient church and of the slow river at Stratford, the walk across the fields to Ann Hathaway's cottage bring deeper knowledge than can be gained from studying the German commentators. The stile, the foot-path way, have not vanished; lark and swallow help you understand, as do pleasant faces that make you feel that you are looking with Shakespeare's eyes at the moment when he first saw Bottom or Autolycus. At every step you draw nearer the poet of Hamlet's deepest questioning, the young poet of Midsummer Night's Dream, the older poet of the Winter's Tale, lover of primroses, violets, and daffodils. It needs neither mouse nor daisy to make the fields about Ayr betray Burns, and the passion and the pain of his love songs find out undiscovered depths within you as you watch the country lovers strolling arm in arm through the summer dusk. Still > "Come rigs, and barley rigs,

> An' corn rigs are bonnie";

and

> "Green grow the rashes, O;
> Green grow the rashes."

What unexpected, humorous revelations your wayward steps in a foreign town may bring! London never wears a greater charm than when it is lending you Lamb's "sweet security of streets!" "O her lamps of a night! her rich goldsmiths, print-shops, toy-shops, mercers, hardware men, pastry cooks, St. Paul's Church-yard, the Strand, Exeter Change, Charing Cross. These are thy gods, O London!" The British profiles on a single British 'bus have shown me in the flesh Mr. Micawber, Uriah Heep, Sairey Gamp, and Mr. Carker. Did glass and stone ever take on such human resemblance as Thackeray's house in Young Street, London? It is a visible interpretation of him. Its very shape and contour; those two wise upper windows, so like the kindly eyes that must often have looked out of them; the graciousness of the front door; the hospitality of the whole face, bidding one welcome to the cosy nooks, mental or others, to be found within, made it, for the moment, identical with its vanished occupant. I never before saw a house look as if enjoying at length some kindly joke. Was it fancy, or did the upper windows wink slightly, while a suggestion of a smile rippled over the façade? Such an experienced little house it is, with such a look of pluck and endurance, I really half expected it to speak, saying something brave and kind and funny. Never before had I realized the spiritual possibilities of brick and mortar; never since have I doubted that houses are inhabited by the souls of those who have lived visibly there.

"Dull would he be of soul who could pass by" a sight so touching as Grasmere without comprehending more fully the way in which the poet-spirit reached out and found spirit working through the beauty of nature. Who would stay at home, idly dreaming, when he might go to see, if but once, those pale green slopes that touch the clouds, the moss-grown stone fences crumbling back into the hills among the grazing sheep, the shining fern, and know the enchantment of that loveliest valley, forever set to the music of swift rippling streams and bird songs, as well as to the "still, sad music of humanity"?

The Footsteps of the Great.

NOT arrogance, but humility may lead you to wish to walk in the very footsteps of the great, lift your eyes to their hills, touch reverently the trunks of the trees under which they have rested. Crossing the threshold of the birthplace of genius may have deep symbolic value, giving hint or promise of crossing the threshold of the soul. There are places in which one glance will do for you what no amount of imagination musing over lives and letters will do. Go to Haworth, clinging with its gray-black stones to the green Yorkshire hill-side and climb the steep and narrow street past the Black Bull, whose name spells deeper tragedy than any biographer has yet recorded of Branwell Brontë. Enter the church-yard, where the shadows of the tall trees fall upon the flat tombstones. Where else, except upon the desolate, sunlit moor, will you meet the soul of Emily Brontë?

> "I'll walk where my own nature would be leading;
> It vexes me to choose another guide:
> Where the gray flocks in ferny glens are feeding,
> Where the wild wind blows on the mountain side."

A step, and lo! you understand as you had not dreamed of doing. The very air is interpreter, and out among the heath and harebells of which she loved to write, the soft wind breathing through the grass, the bees humming dreamily about, larks singing high in the blue sky, you discover something of the depth and the breadth of that nature. Surely it is well to be privileged to see the horizon line which taught Emily Brontë:

> "There is not room for death,
> Nor atom that his might could render void—!"

Homeliest, most uncompromising of birth-places, open and bare to the sky, in level country where there is no obvious leafy picturesqueness, is Thomas Carlyle's Ecclefechan. In this hard little foreign-looking village, with house walls of stone or of plaster close to the street, no grace of tree or flower between them and the cobble-stone pavement, "encircled by the mystery of existence; under the deep heavenly firmament; waited on by the four golden seasons, did the child sit and learn." Where can you find another spot which the look of things betrays more fully the beginning of a life-struggle—soul against the material world? Where else can you learn so well Carlyle's message of the unreality of visible things, the wonder of the unseen? The little trudging legs adown the village street to-day suggest the beginning of his life-long pilgrimage, and, far across the level green, blue Skiddaw to the south lends the look of ethereal distance that is nearest heaven.

Sometimes the mere sight of a place betrays more than an individual, reveals a nation, faith, forgotten, or half known, or potent still. The Druid stones at Carmac, set in soft grass, or at Salisbury upon the downs, start your thoughts wandering farther than you can follow them. If modern Greece is disillusioning, and it may be to people who lack imagination to see in dust and stone—and think, what stone, Pentelic marble!—the glory of past days, who could stand at ancient Delphi and fail to comprehend the worship of Apollo, the sun-god? As, in earliest morning, the light through the cleft steals from peak to gray peak, touches the mountain side, and flows, a flood of glory through the deep gorge to the wide olive plain and Itea, far by the sea, visibly to his temple walks the god. The shrine clings to the steep mountain side, where wonderful Delphi still stands on the lower slopes of Mount Parnassus, whose peak is hidden, though perhaps the circling eagles about the grim heights see; and standing here one wonders how any people could have failed to worship the splendor thus revealed each day at dawn. Even so, to a wanderer in another land, may the softer slopes about Assisi, the nibbling sheep, the barefooted poor, reveal St. Francis, and a deeper faith.

Happy are we if hands and feet can serve us in this quest, through which we are drawn by vague misgiving and sense of lack to the dim and hoary corners of antiquity. When one may go to listen to the "beauty born of murmuring sound," why should one stay stupidly at home and try to make it up? Why think that one can invent out of one's inner consciousness that to whose making a nation's faith, the endeavor of a race, has gone? Can you sit on your own door step and erect the Taj Mahal? Or raise the cunning walls of St. Sophia? Does not the charge of arrogance and conceit better fit this case than the other? If eye and ear and finger-tip may minister to the soul; if certain humble sense impressions may help the vision of that "inward eye which is the bliss" of the true disciple of beauty, were it not strange to ignore them? What is art but the creation for eye and ear of inner thought and feeling, the ministrant whereby the senses may become handmaidens of the spirit? Even so may the visible and tangible loveliness of places betray the "very sky and sea line" of a poet's nature; "nor soul helps sense," in this way, more than "sense helps soul."

As to "Survivals"

A BRITISH friend sent me several months ago the report, in the London Times, of Lord Rosebery's speech in Edinburgh against the proposed abolition of the House of Lords. It is germane to the criticism which I am about to make that no American reader can have knowledge of such an address from his own compatriotic newspapers. He must know it from the page-long report in the London Times, or he will not know it at all. And such a speech is so very well worth knowing. The chiefest emotion it excited in my own mind was one of patriotic envy. "Is there any public man in the United States," I said to myself, "who could have made that speech to save his life?" The scholarship, the candor, the wit, the courtesy, almost above all what Boswell, speaking of Topham Beauclerk's way of telling a story, calls "a lively elegant manner, and that air of 'the world' which has I know not what impressive effect, as if there were something more than is expressed, or than perhaps we can perfectly understand." These are the qualities of British parliamentary eloquence, no doubt, and have been, and will apparently continue to be, beyond the reach even of the athletes of American parliamentary eloquence. I comforted myself, in reading a speech otherwise so wounding to my patriotic self-love, with thinking that the American public speakers who could have come nearest to it—I need not name them—would have been the first to allow that they could not have equalled it. Very likely they would have attributed their admitted inferiority to the inferiority of their audiences, whether in the Senate or on the "hustings," to the audiences of the noble lord, whether his immediate auditory in the hall at Edinburgh, or the greater secondary audience in the apprehension of which every British orator goes in fear, of the readers of the London Times.

But, of course, this deprecation, so far from attenuating the criticism, at once sharpens and enlarges it. Even if an American orator could make as "great" a speech, the deprecation would import he could not get an equal hearing. Manifestly, this impeachment of the auditory, immediate or secondary, is a more serious national impeachment than would be the mere confession that we had not, at present, any orators of Lord Rosebery's rank; because it is a confession that we cannot furnish an equally intelligent audience. Doubtless there is no newspaper in the United States which would report an American speech as important as that of Lord Rosebery at Edinburgh, with a fulness equal to that of the London Times. We cannot afford the space, would be the explanation. But when you consider the ephemera and the trivialities to which the newspapers of wide circulation would postpone the full presentation of a "great argument," involving large present and future issues of national destiny, the explanation is an aggravation. Meanwhile, it is consolatory to the believer in democracy to reflect, the doleful vaticinations of the British Conservative Cassandras have been sufficiently refuted by the fact that such a speech as this should have been fully reported in a "leading organ" in 1911, and disseminated throughout the English-reading world to fulfil its proper mission with intelligent, candid and conscientious readers of the English language. While the Reform Bill of 1832 was under discussion, its opponents were predicting that its passage would be the end of statesmanship. Still more doleful were the vaticinations of the Cassandras of 1866, upon the what, to American readers, seemed very moderate extension then proposed to the very moderate reform of 1832. Upon ears not even yet stricken with surdity fell the eloquent deprecations of Robert Lowe: "Democracy you can have at any time. Night and day the gate stands open which leads to that bare and arid plain where every ant-hill is a mountain, and every thistle is a forest tree." And yet, forty-five years later, comes evidence that, to the enlarged British constituencies, the ant-hill and the mountain, the thistle and the forest tree, are very much where they were.

It is true, there is some evidence to the contrary. Mr. Asquith himself must have grinned, though perhaps ruefully if not grudgingly, at the epigram which appeared in a London paper most Britannically without title or explicit comment:

> I hold the office held by Pitt;
> Where Peel and Gladstone sat, I sit;
> You pay me fifteen pounds a day;
> And yet I say the things I say.

But, upon the whole, one would be rash to assert that the public life of England reflects less accurately the national movement than the public life of America, which is theoretically so much more "advanced." From the point of view of a merely theoretical political evolution, Lord Rosebery, in his capacity of hereditary legislator, is an anomaly and a "survival," and the average American senator, the average American M. C., whatever else he may be, is at least the accurate representative of "the Spirit of the Age." This theoretical conclusion will hardly survive the shock of the facts. For, almost at the same moment when Lord Rosebery was approving himself at Edinburgh the most enlightened of the moderns, there were emerging, into such light as is afforded by the comparatively illegible reports of the debates in Congress, strange pleiosaurs and pterodactyls, survivals of an antediluvian world, heaved up out of due time from "the dead and most untouched deep water of the sea."

·THE FIELD OF ART·

THE PRINT—ITS CHARM AND ITS QUEST

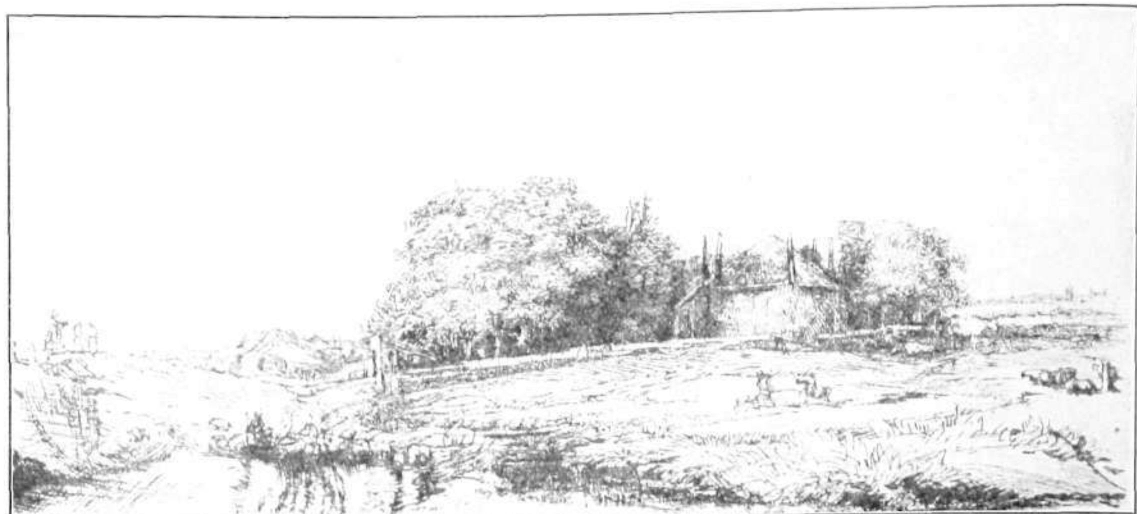
AMID the multitude of exhibitions of paintings which are offered us every season, the apparently increasing interest in prints does not make itself felt with any striking force, but it is yet evidenced unobtrusively. The elements of color and tone and comparative completeness of effect give the painting a hold on the public, an appeal to larger circles, which the print cannot readily attain. Its size and nature, and the fact that it must be studied at close range, make it a thing to be enjoyed in a small exhibition gallery, in the quiet of a print room or of a private collector's study.

The Nativity.
From the wood-engraving by Dürer.

Like any work of art, the print demands the thought and sympathy of the beholder, in order to insure full appreciation. There must be as thorough a conception as possible of the artist's viewpoint and intention. Two general principles which govern all good art are in force here as well: the artist must respect the limits of his medium, and he must tell something worth saying. In other words, the expression of individuality should manifest itself within the limitation set by the tools used.

The field of the print may seem restricted at first sight, but even the slightest survey of four centuries of achievement discloses an enormous variety of artistic individuality, of subject, of style, and of technical methods. The last plays an important part in the charm of the print. As in painting we have oil and water color and pastel each with its distinct characteristics and potentialities, so in black-and-white prints (not to speak of color work for the present) etching, line engraving on copper, mezzotint, aquatinting and other like methods, wood-engraving and lithography, each presents quite different effects and possibilities. The limits that each medium imposes on those who use it yet leave great freedom within their bounds. Witness such obvious contrasts as Whistler's Thames series and his later Venetian scenes in etching (or, say, Meryon's visions of Paris and Bracquemond's glorification of "The Old Cock," if comparison of different personalities be preferred), Sargent's unctuous blacks, the bravura of Isabey, and the silver-point delicacy of Legros in lithography, the severe restraint of Mantegna, and the brilliant tours de force of Drevet in line engraving; the Teutonic vigor of Dürer (who worked with a full understanding of the possibilities of facsimile cutting on the block), the sensitive decorativeness of the Japanese or the remarkable American translations of paintings into the language of the burin in wood-engraving. Each medium, then, has its own distinct character and attraction.

The taste for prints may be more or less a specialized one, but how broad a specialty it is,



Landscape with a flock of sheep.
From the etching by Rembrandt.

and what a wide range of varied delights it offers! Many collectors are attracted by, and procure, mainly work in a particular medium, and in that again by preference the productions of a particular group of artists. One may be devoted especially to line engraving, with its formality in statement and distinction of utterance, which fitted it so well for the reproduction of works of art in the period of its greatest development. In his portfolios we may find the earlier work, by Raimondi, translating Raphael with adaptability, reserve and beauty of line, or by Dürer (delineating with loving care the German interior in which he places St. Jerome), or the stately portraits by Nanteuil, Edelinck, Masson, the Drevets, or other French engravers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Perhaps the reproductions, by Raphael Morghen and other Italian burinists, of canvases by their compatriots, or even the minutely delicate plates by later Englishmen after Turner. Another is particularly attracted by the painter-etching, with its often summary statement of essential fact, its spontaneity, its direct expression of the artist's self. Among the various media used in the production of prints, etching holds a high place. It has offered so much to the artist and has become, above all others, a vehicle for the direct conveyance of his impressions.

For that reason the field of painter-etching is particularly broad and inclusive. It offers an astonishing array of individualities, differing in their message, in their manner of expression, in the variety of effect which they draw from the combination of copper-plate, etching-ground, etching needle, and acid. The manliness and mastery of Rembrandt, the deft and delicate sureness of Whistler with his touch of feminine intuitiveness, Meryon's sombre yet living interpretation of the spirit of old Paris, Hayden's incisive and sympathetic presentation of English landscape, the straightforward views of Dutch life given by Ostade, the landscapes of Claude, the portrait etchings of Van Dyck, are so many outlooks on strong individualities seen at close range. And the minor men, from the seventeenth century to the present day, offer a wealth of material.

Lithography has a strong attraction for some. Not so incisive as the etching, it yet offers a ready response to the artist's touch; a suppleness, a pliancy, that adapts it equally well to the pearly grays of the early masters of the stone, the joyous lightness of a Whistler, the vigorous yet free crayonnage of Gavarni the little giant Menzel's masterly handling of brush and scraper.

A similar range of effects may be exhibited in wood-engraving, a reproductive art ever close to the people from the early block-books to its extensive use for book illustration in the nineteenth century. To-day it, too, serves as a painter art, a means of original production, a vehicle for the direct expression of an artist's own ideas.

There is also the eclectic collector, who procures the good thing of any time or country, who possesses lithographs by Whistler, plates from Turner's mezzotinted "Liber Studiorum," etchings by Hayden, Morghen's "Last Supper" after Da Vinci, and examples of the seventeenth century French portraitists.

Æsthetic enjoyment of prints and the appreciation of technique are closely connected, and the subject interest likewise plays an important part in the charm of the print. To the delight in the sympathetic craftsmanship of the British mezzotinters who, in the second half of the eighteenth century, were perpetuating and reproducing the record of stateliness, dignity, and beauty, which their compatriots painted, there is added the interest in the very life of the day which is thus pictured. The mezzotinters of this period, especially in the widely popular plates after Morland, gave form also to British scenes of country life, just as Bartolozzi and other stipple engravers of his day expressed the sentimentality and taste for allegory as shown in the designs of Angelica Kaufmann. Similarly the eighteenth century French prints form a pictorial comment on national characteristics shown in the light-hearted, charming frivolity of Fragonard and Boucher, and the veiled voluptuousness of Greuze's idyls of home life and youthful innocence. The French color-print of that period, again, has its distinct special note of charm. The quest of the collector may be directed toward the subject without regard to medium or school or period of art. Such tendency to specialization has many outlets: Portraits of some individual (Washington, Napoleon, Franklin), a period of history (the American Revolution), some phase of human activity

Mrs. Robinson.
From a mezzotint by J. R. Smith, after the painting by G. Romney.

(ballooning, transportation), some aspect of social life (costume), views of particular places, sporting prints.

All of this is of necessity the barest indication of the varied pleasures that the study of prints holds out. The collector's opportunities are many and they are adapted to pocket-books of various sizes. It is the unusually big price that gets the most publicity, but we cannot all, nor need we, think of acquiring the most expensive prints. They are not the only ones worth having. Rembrandt, Whistler, Meryon are great figures in the annals of etching, but they are not the only artists who etched. We do not read Shakespeare or Goethe or the Bible or even a "hundred best books" exclusively. The graphic arts are living arts, practiced to-day by men whose work is worthy of notice. There is certainly a wide diversity in prices and a large field to choose from. The lover of art who cannot afford paintings has a wide and inexpensive field in which to cultivate, gratify and show his artistic tastes.

Molière.
From an engraving on copper by Ficquet, after the painting by Coypel.

We cannot all hunt big game. To Hayden's advice to collectors of very moderate means—namely, that they hunt in old numbers of English magazines for wood-engravings after the noted British illustrators of the sixties—there may be added the hint that examination of American magazines of the seventies and eighties will disclose much work by the wood-engravers whose productions caused such éclat in those days, and that back numbers of art publications such as Hamerton's Portfolio, L'Art, Zeitschrift für Bildende Kunst will yield many an interesting etching. Discrimination is necessary, of course.

Tastes vary, and it is well that each one of us should exercise his own freely, provided he does it thoughtfully. The collector who can afford to gratify his desire for the unique early state, for the series of trial proofs of a particular print, gives himself pleasure and certainly adds to the documentary material for the history of the individual artist's development. The one of less ample means will direct his attention toward such "states" (usually the early finished ones) of a given print as represent the artist's final intention. Rarity and merit may or may not be coincident. The early state does not always show the print at its best.

The average collector of moderate means will wisely seek the good impression whether it be the early or rare state or not, and rest content to let the curiosity go to those that want it.

And if he furthermore keeps his head in print shop and auction room, and makes haste slowly, he will be in a fair way to prove the truth of the statement that even to-day a collection can be formed on a comparatively small outlay. And the best, most satisfactory selection will always be based on the collector's mental response to the individuality and intention of the artist. The whole secret then is to see with understanding eyes and an unprejudiced mind. Possession is, after all, a secondary matter. The rich source of pleasure is the loving study of the print, the entrance into the world of beauty and human interest which it offers, the acquaintance with the mind and heart that lie back of its production and make it a human document.

Frank Weitenkampf.

The sweetheart of the corn

Kellogg's

TOASTED CORN FLAKES

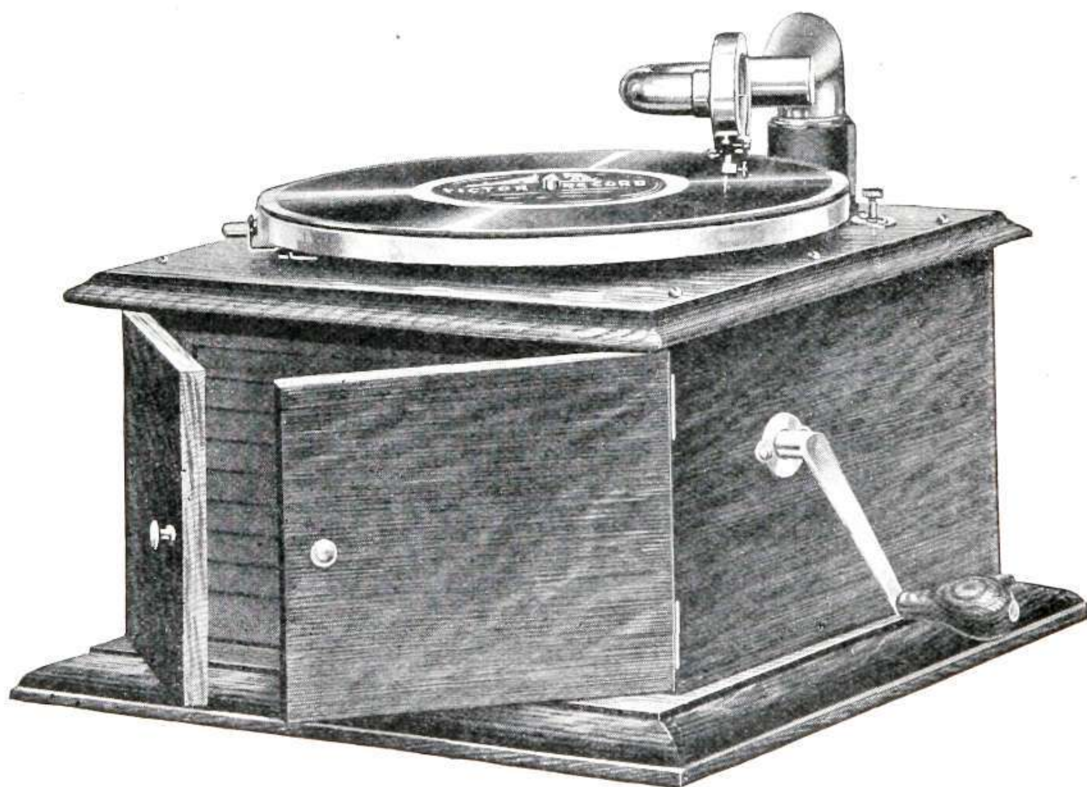
Made from the sweet hearts of the best white corn, skilfully cooked, flaked and toasted—giving it the flavor that won immediate favor. The great factory at Battle Creek works day and night to supply the ever increasing demand for this delicious food. If you've never tried Kellogg's get a package to-day. Just tell your grocer you want the genuine—that nothing else will do.

THE ORIGINAL HAS THIS SIGNATURE

W. K. Kellogg

The latest product of the Victor Company

This genuine Victor-Victrola for $15



Victor-Victrola IV, $15

Equipped with all the latest Victor improvements, including Exhibition sound box, tapering arm, "goose-neck", ten-inch turntable and concealed sound-amplifying features.

Other styles of the Victor-Victrola $50, $75, $100, $150, $200, $250. Victors $10 to $100.

The fact that this instrument bears the famous Victor trademark and is a genuine Victor-Victrola guarantees to you the same high quality and standard of excellence so well established and recognized in all products of the Victor Company.

There is no reason on earth why you should hesitate another moment in placing this greatest of all musical instruments in your home.

All we ask is that you go to any music store and hear this new Victor-Victrola.

Victor Talking Machine Co.
Camden, N. J., U. S. A.
Berliner Gramophone Co., Montreal, Canadian Distributors

Always use Victor Records played with Victor Needles—there is no other way to get the unequaled Victor tone

Victor Needles 6 cents per 100; 60 cents per 1000

New Victor Records are on sale at all dealers on the 28th of each month

PEARLINE VS POPPED WASHING POWDERS

This picture shows simply an exaggerated case of what happens when Soap Powder is made by the new method.

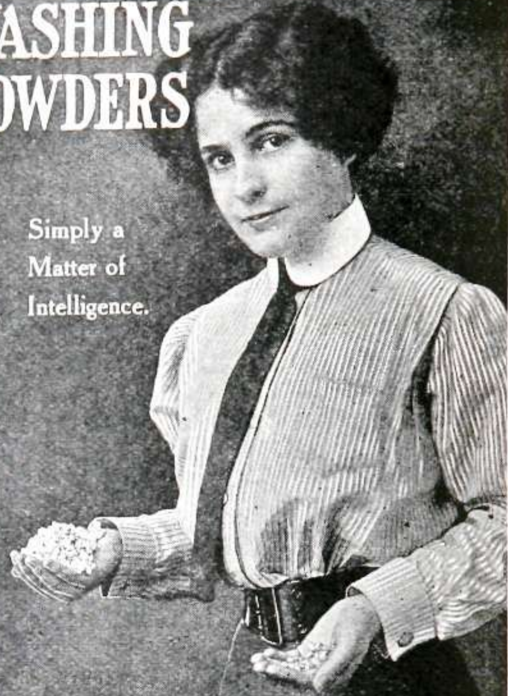
Each Grain of Soap Powder is POPPED—FLUFFED—FLAKED—it Fills more space—yet does no more work.

Besides—Water is added to Increase the Weight—again Decreasing the value of the Powder.

PEARLINE IS NOT POPPED, FLUFFED, FLAKED, WATERED.

PEARLINE is the same DRY—DENSE—CONDENSED—EFFICIENT Soap Powder it has been for 30 years. A tablespoonful will do the work of several of these Popped, Look-Big Powders. PEARLINE is more than ever

BEST BY TEST



THIS PHOTO SHOWS SIXTY KERNELS OF CORN BEFORE AND AFTER POPPING.
60 KERNELS OF UNPOPPED CORN WEIGH 6 GRAMS AND FILL $\frac{9}{20}$ OF A CUBIC INCH.
60 KERNELS POPPED WEIGH 6 GRAMS AND FILL $7\frac{1}{5}$ CUBIC INCHES.
WEIGHT REMAINED THE SAME—VOLUME INCREASED 16 TIMES.

Esterbrook

Steel Pens

250 Styles

For business, the home, schools —every purpose.

Backed by a half-century's reputation.

At all Stationers.

The Esterbrook Steel Pen Mfg. Co.
95 John St., New York.
Works: Camden, N. J.

A COLLAR BUTTON IS LITTLE

But there's a mighty deal of satisfaction in having one that is perfect in workmanship—absolutely smooth on the back, so it will not scratch or chafe the neck—made with an honest layer of gold that won't wear off in years of use—made in one piece and so strong that it cannot break—and made in so many different styles and sizes that you can select one to suit your exact needs—either of solid gold or in the best quality of rolled gold plate—That collar button is the

KREMENTZ

and to make sure that you are getting the genuine, look for the name stamped on the back. Each button guaranteed—a new one free in exchange if broken or damaged from any cause.

KREMENTZ & CO.
107 Chestnut St., Newark, N. J.

TIFFANY & CO.

ARTICLES AT MODERATE PRICES HAVE ALWAYS BEEN A FEATURE OF TIFFANY & CO.S STOCK. EVERY ORDER IS GIVEN THE MOST EXACTING ATTENTION REGARDLESS OF THE AMOUNT INVOLVED

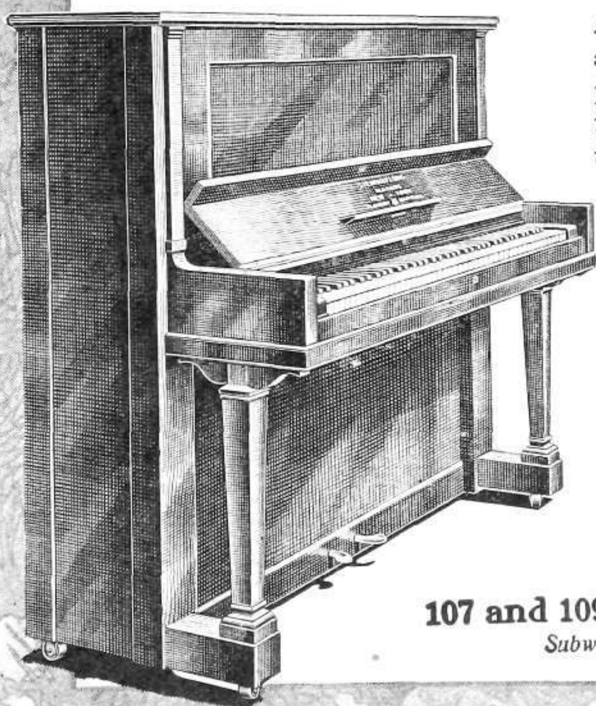
THE TIFFANY BLUE BOOK, WHICH WILL BE SENT UPON REQUEST, CONTAINS CONCISE DESCRIPTIONS AND THE RANGE OF PRICES OF JEWELRY SILVERWARE, AND ARTISTIC MERCHANDISE

FIFTH AVENUE & 37TH STREET
NEW YORK

STEINWAY

Merit made the reputation, and reputation established the prestige which maintains the Steinway leader among all pianos.

The Steinway Vertegrand

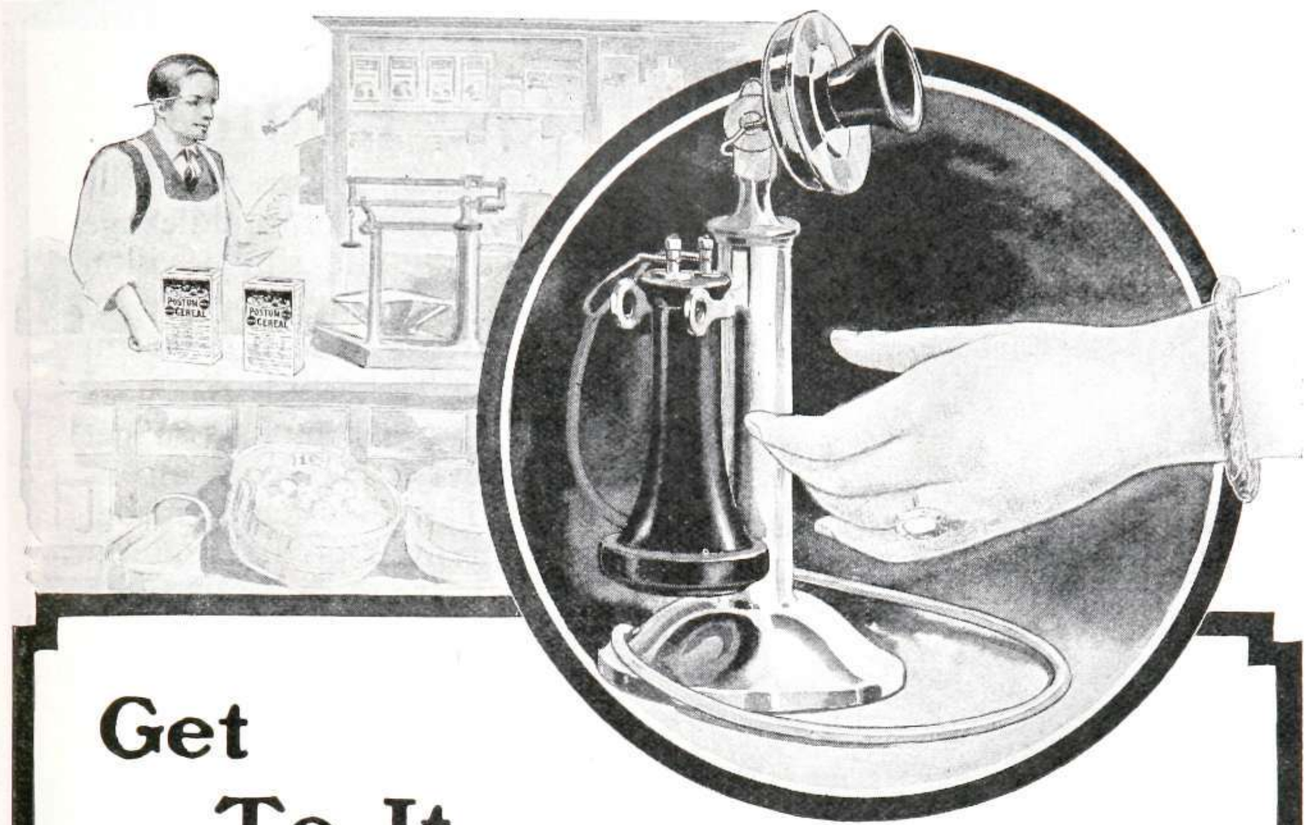


A characteristic Steinway achievement. Constructed to produce in a piano of upright form the same musical expression that has always individualized the Steinway Grand—"An Upright Piano of Grand Value."

Price, in Ebonized Case, $550

The name of the Steinway dealer nearest you, together with illustrated literature, will be sent upon request and mention of this magazine.

STEINWAY & SONS
STEINWAY HALL
107 and 109 East 14th St., New York
Subway Express Station at the Door



Get To It

Ask your grocer for

POSTUM

There is really no need for much of the headache and nervousness one hears about; a large part of it is the result of faulty living.

Improper table beverages, such as coffee and tea, which contain nerve-racking irritants, contribute much to bodily pain and discomfort.

The cause may be the thing you least suspect.

The quick and easy way to relief is to make a change.

If annoyed by ills that mar health and happiness, stop using coffee and tea ten days and try Postum.

Thousands have done it and know

"There's a Reason"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Limited
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Look Young!

The double vision glasses worn by the man or woman of middle age look exactly like the single vision glasses worn by young people of twenty-five—if the double-vision lenses are Kryptok Lenses.

When you buy Kryptoks you get the only unnoticeable and inconspicuous double-vision lenses made. Two pieces of glass of different refractive powers are so skillfully fused into one lens that no line of demarcation can be seen. The lens is then ground with two distinct focal points—one for near vision and the other for far vision.

KRYPTOK LENSES

Worn by over 200,000 people

Kryptok Lenses look exactly like single-vision lenses

They do not mar one's good looks nor brand the wearer unmistakably with a sign of age. Ask for them by name. Even the nearest imitation is far different in appearance.

Your optician can supply you. Kryptoks can be fitted to any style frame or to your old frames.

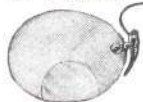
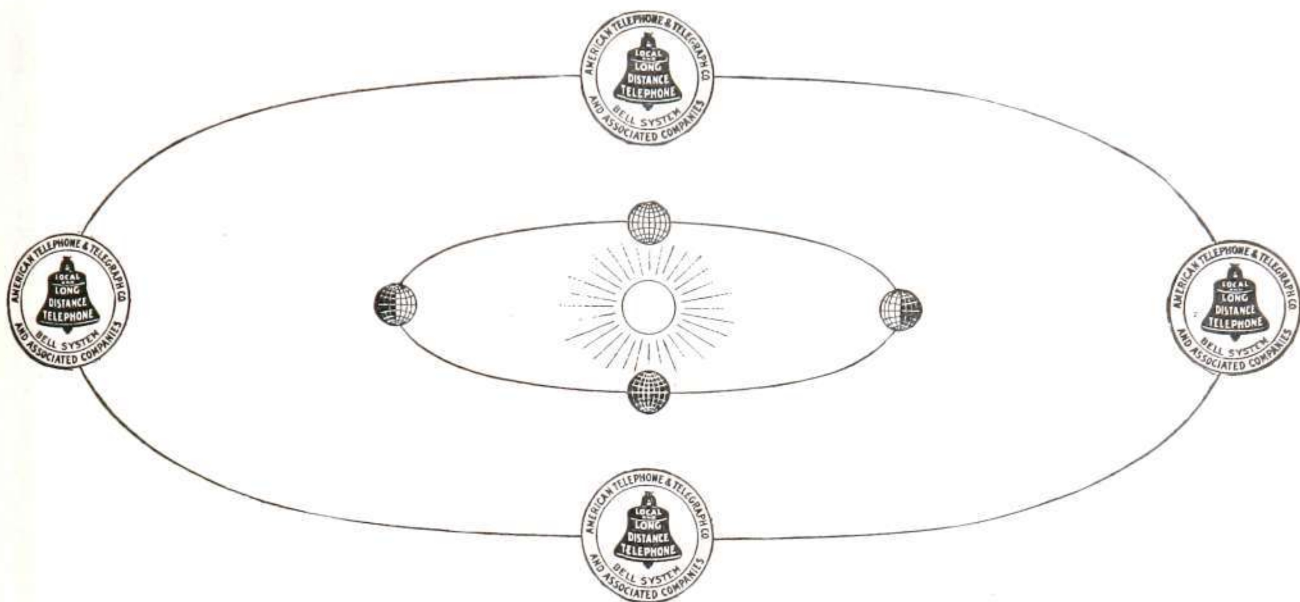
Send for Descriptive Booklet which explains Kryptok Lenses fully besides containing many facts of interest to every one who wears two-vision lenses or who should wear them.

KRYPTOK COMPANY
111 East 23rd St. New York

This is a Kryptok Lens
Note the absence of seams. Kryptok Lenses do not look odd or suggest old age. They improve one's appearance.

This is a Pasted Lens
Note the ugly seams. They are unsightly. They indicate old age. Pasted lenses detract from one's appearance.





Comparison of the Distance Traveled by Earth and Bell Telephone Messages

The Orbit of Universal Service

In one year the earth on its orbit around the sun travels 584,000,000 miles; in the same time telephone messages travel 23,600,000,000 miles over the pathways provided by the Bell system. That means that the 7,175,000,000 Bell conversations cover a distance forty times that traveled by the earth.

When it is considered that each telephone connection includes replies as well as messages, the mileage of talk becomes even greater.

These aggregate distances, which exceed in their total the limits of the Solar system, are actually confined within the boundaries of the United States. They show the progress that has been made towards universal service and the intensive intercommunication between 90,000,000 people.

No such mileage of talk could be possible in such a limited area were it not that each telephone is the center of one universal system.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Service

NEXT to a good dentist, the best friend to your teeth is a Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush. You cannot clean teeth by brushing over them. Nor can you properly reach the back teeth with the ordinary tooth brush. The Pro-phy-lac-tic

is the only brush that thoroughly cleanses in and around all the teeth, both back and front alike—its curved handle and irregular tufts are designed for this purpose. You can hang it up —dries quickly—absolutely sanitary.

Packed in an individual yellow box which protects against handling. Rigid or flexible handle. Prices: 25c, 35c, 40c. Every Pro-phy-lac-tic fully guaranteed. We replace if defective.

Our Interesting Booklet is Yours for the Asking

FLORENCE MFG. CO., 130 Pine St., Florence, Mass.

Sole Makers of Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth, Hair, Military and Hand Brushes.

THESE GENUINE WIEDERSEIM KIDS

Were not fed on

Post Toasties

but hope to be.

(Who wants the dog?)

The kids are delicious and the food even more so, especially when served with nice yellow cream and a sprinkle of sugar.

"The Memory Lingers"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Limited
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Building, Furnishing

Garages, Cottages, School Houses, Camps —Portable Buildings of every description.

Factory Made at Low Cost.

Art Catalog by mail on receipt of 4c stamps

WYCKOFF LUMBER & MFG. CO.,
423 GREEN STREET, ITHACA, N. Y.

Send 6 cents for a copy of "24 CRAFTSMAN HOUSES" showing exterior and floor plans of 24 houses that cost from $900 up to build. To interest you in our magazine, "THE CRAFTSMAN," our FREE HOUSE PLANS, and in Craft articles, we will also send you a beautifully printed 32-page booklet entitled "The Craftsman House." If you are interested at all, both of these books will be very useful to you.

"THE CRAFTSMAN IDEA" means real homes, not mere houses; it shows you how to save money on useless partitions—how to avoid over-decoration, how to get wide sweeps of space (even in a small house), restful tones that match and blend—and enables any one to always have a beautiful and artistic home.

"THE CRAFTSMAN MAGAZINE" treats of building, furnishing and beautifying homes—of art—embroidery—cabinet work—and kindred topics. In the Magazine each month are published the plans of two new and entirely different houses. Already we have shown 125 houses, and you can have your own choice.

"CRAFTSMAN HOMES," by Gustav Stickley, 205 pages, beautifully bound and printed, treats of home building, home making, home furnishings in full.

Edgar E. Phillips, Manager THE CRAFTSMAN
Room 270, 41 W. 34th St., N. Y. City.

R·WALLACE SILVER

HALLOWEEN OR THANKSGIVING TABLE

Laurel Pattern

Washington Pattern

The Washington, our new Sterling Silver Service, embodies the finer features of the Colonial period. It is a pattern that will endure. It perpetuates the simple grace of pre-Independence days.

Its original charm and expert craftsmanship give the pieces that substantial richness so characteristic of sound Sterling Silver.

There is an atmosphere of nobility about The Washington which lends a certain distinction to any table.

TRADE "1835 MARK R·WALLACE"

Silver Plate That Resists Wear

Besides the Sterling character imparted to 1835 R. Wallace Silver Plate by superior design and execution, each piece is extra plated on the parts most exposed to wear. This gives a lasting quality difficult to find elsewhere.

Any piece of silver bearing the 1835 R. Wallace trade-mark which does not give positive satisfaction in any household will be replaced.

A postal card brings our valuable book, "The Dining Room, its Decorations and Entertaining," including "How to Set the Table," by Mrs. Rorer.

R. WALLACE & SONS MFG. CO
Box 24 Wallingford, Conn.
New York Chicago San Francisco London

— 1835 — R·WALLACE Silver plate

RW&S STERLING

The "Universal" Food Chopper

Does away entirely with the drudgery of the chopping knife and bowl.

Chops all kinds of food whether meat or vegetables—raw or cooked—as coarse or fine as wanted—rapidly and easily.

The "Universal" Coffee Percolator

Excels other ways of making coffee because the percolation is completed before the water boils.

Coffee made in it is easily known by its delicious aroma, fine flavor and the absence of the bitter taste caused by boiling.

If you want to know what perfect coffee is like, try the "Universal."

The "Universal" Bread Maker

Mixes and kneads bread in three minutes. The hands do not touch the dough. Simple, easy, sanitary.

Does away with hand kneading.

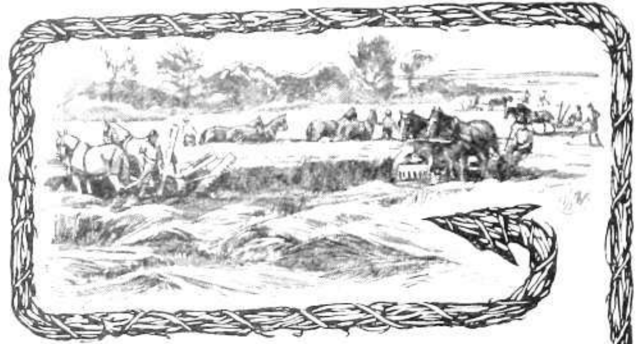
Makes perfect bread.

Price, $2.00

Write for our large book of "Universal" Helps to Housekeepers. Free.

Buy at leading dealers everywhere.

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK
282 Commercial St., New Britain, Conn.



When the question of new rugs comes up take a hint from Dame Nature and furnish your home with Crex.

It is a beautiful, durable floor covering made from the wonderful grass that grows on the prairies of the Northwest.

Crex Rugs and Carpets are unlike anything else. Their texture is unusual and attractive. Although of a firm weave and heavy in appearance, they are light enough to be easily handled.

CREX
Grass Carpets and Rugs
TRADE MARK

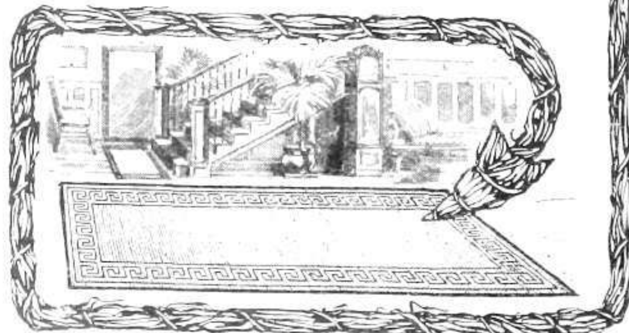
do not collect and hold dirt. You will find their prices lower than those you are accustomed to pay for floor coverings.

You will know the genuine by the Crex trade mark. A label bearing it is attached to every Crex Rug.

Before making your next purchase of rugs or carpets, write us for our free booklet which describes Crex and illustrates in actual colors, striped, figured and solid, a great variety of rugs, carpets and runners. Ask for booklet No. 106.

Crex Carpets and Rugs are for sale everywhere. Order through your local dealer.

CREX CARPET COMPANY
377 Broadway 59-61 White St.
New York
MILLS: St. Paul, Minn.; Superior, Wis.



About a Book and a Smile— Your Chance to Get Both!

"The Ostermoor Smile"

TOMORROW morning, as you go forth to business or shopping, note the faces you meet. Some of them wear a tired look; on the others you see the glisten of freshness—the Ostermoor Smile!

Whence came that smile? It is simply the natural bubbling over of restored strength and reinforced nerves that follow a night's complete rest on an Ostermoor Mattress.

One can just feel the Ostermoor drive away fatigue and bring refreshment in its place. This is comfort, indeed, and it will last for generations. You must have seen the letters published in our recent advertisements which proved that Ostermoors have given this kind of service from five years up to half a century, and are still giving it. You can read these letters—and get much valuable information about mattresses and about sleep, if you

Write for 144-Page Book and Samples—Free

Let those who have nothing else to offer take up your time by telling how they make "mattresses." We're most interested in making comfort. Every one knows that we perfected the wondrous process of interweaving thousands of filmy layers of fine cotton into a single Ostermoor, instead of packing it in in bulk. The Ostermoor is built—not stuffed. This process is exclusively Ostermoor. That is why the Ostermoor has that fluffy, downy softness—with the necessary resiliency and permanency—and why imitations haven't. The Ostermoor is absolutely clean, germ-proof, dust-proof, vermin-proof and never needs re-making.

The book—stand up—get a postal—mail it.

"Built—not Stuffed"

Ostermoor $15.

MATTRESSES COST
Express Prepaid
Best Blue and White Ticking

Size	Weight	Price
4'-6"	45 lbs.	$15.00
4'-0"	40 "	13.35
3'-6"	35 "	11.70
3'-0"	30 "	10.00
2'-6"	25 "	8.35

All 6 feet 3 inches long.
In two parts, 50c extra.
Dust-proof, satin-finish ticking, $1.50 more.
French mercerized Art Twills, $3.00 more.

Yes, there are imitations, dozens of them. You'll find many stores more anxious to sell them because they make a bigger profit. But you want the Ostermoor—and wouldn't you like to see the Ostermoor Smile ripple over your breakfast table tomorrow morning?

Don't buy the "just-as-good." Our trade-mark is your guarantee. When necessary, we ship mattresses express prepaid, on thirty nights' free trial, same day your order is received. Money back if you want it.

Get the Book; that's Important!

Ostermoor & Co., 108 Elizabeth St., New York

Canadian Agency: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal

"Built—Not Stuffed"

Harmony and Durability in Paint

It is a fortunate thing in house painting that beauty and wear may go hand in hand. The color scheme should be one that will make the home an attractive and harmonious part of the neighborhood picture. That gives you beauty.

The wear that is the duration of the beauty depends on the materials and the way they are applied. When you buy or specify

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil, you have gone as far as any one can go in the choice of right materials. They are standard and reliable. A good painter does the rest.

The cost of this best sort of painting is not excessive, for two simple reasons: White lead paint covers better than substitutes and wears longer.

Painting Helps,

one of our booklets, gives you practical aid in deciding what combination of colors will best suit your style of house. Other booklets and specifications will show you the advantages of "Dutch Boy Painter" white-leading. Ask for Painting Helps No. 745.

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY

New York Boston Buffalo Cincinnati Cleveland
St. Louis Chicago San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

"My hobby is easy chairs—I try every one I see—but never have I seen one that for real rest and chair comfort equals my Slumber Chair."

—and it's all because both seat and back are adjustable—not back only.

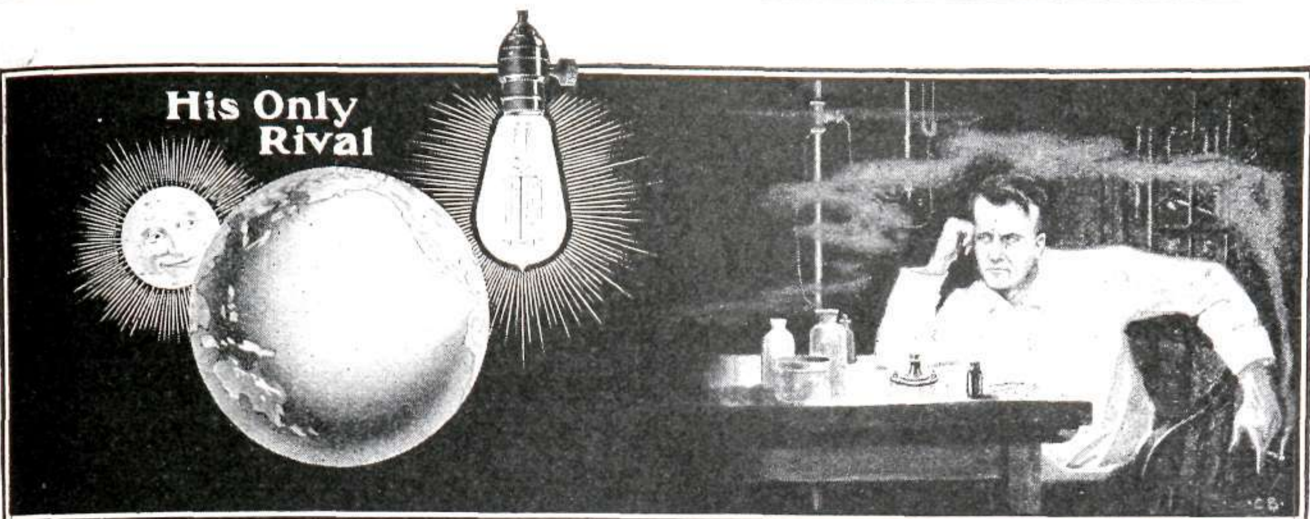
Sold on 30 days' trial and a three years' guarantee.

Handsome catalog free showing over 150 Slumber and Fireside Chairs in designs, woods and finishes to suit any surroundings. At your dealer's, or direct where not represented.

A handsome davenport without suggestion of bed, yet quickly transformed into a full width attractive sleep-inviting bed with box mattress and cushion top. Placed in library, living or sitting room the Slumber Davenport Bed provides accommodation so much desired for the unexpected guest. And then it's Streit quality, sold on 30 days' trial and three years' guarantee.

Send for free catalog showing over 20 designs in all woods and finishes. At your dealer's or shipped direct where not represented.

THE C.F. STREIT MFG. CO.
1045 KENNER ST.
CINCINNATI, O.



Thirty-two years ago the Wizard of Menlo Park dreamed his great dream which has now come true—Electric Light for Everybody.

Edison's Dream Comes True

Edison put a little paper horseshoe filament, that he had carbonized, into a glass bulb and pumped out the air. Next he passed a current of electricity through this horseshoe.

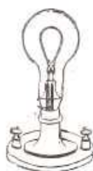
The Dream

As it glowed white hot, lighting up the darkened room, another light glowed in his face, for he saw the revolution that tiny bulb would bring about in the world's sunless hours.

The Revolution

After a quarter century another invention in electric lamps revealed the dawn of a new era in electric lighting—unseen in the dreams of anyone—except Edison.

This was the Tungsten filament lamp which—instead of the original 16 candlepower—gave actually 80 candles of light from the same 100 watts.



Edison's Original Lamp Invented 32 Years Ago

Latest Edison Mazda Lamp with Non-fragile Filament

This lamp almost materialized the Dream—but the filament was brittle—and the cost was high.

Both these obstacles are now cleared away. First, a brilliant invention has resulted in the production of a drawn wire stronger than steel. This wire is used to make the filaments in Edison Mazda lamps.

The filament or "burner" in Edison Mazda lamps is so sturdy that hundreds of thousands are in use under severe and trying conditions, even for lighting railway trains and automobiles.

Next—of prime importance—the full advantage of the General Electric Company's reduced cost of manufacture has been given to the public.

And the present price of the perfected Edison Mazda lamp is about one-half that of the first, brittle Tungsten lamp.

The Dream Comes True

So, with lower cost and a better lamp, Edison's dream of the Sun's Only Rival has come true. Now, you can have Electric Light in your home, office, store, factory—at a price you have been waiting for, if you use the latest invention—Edison Mazda Lamps, made only by the General Electric Company.

Look for this General Electric Monogram, the Guarantee of Excellence on Everything ELECTRICAL

Buy these Lamps and see how Edison's Dream has come true for you

Sold by Electric Light Companies and Dealers everywhere

General Electric Company

Principal Office: Schenectady, N. Y. Main Lamp Sales Office: Harrison, N. J.

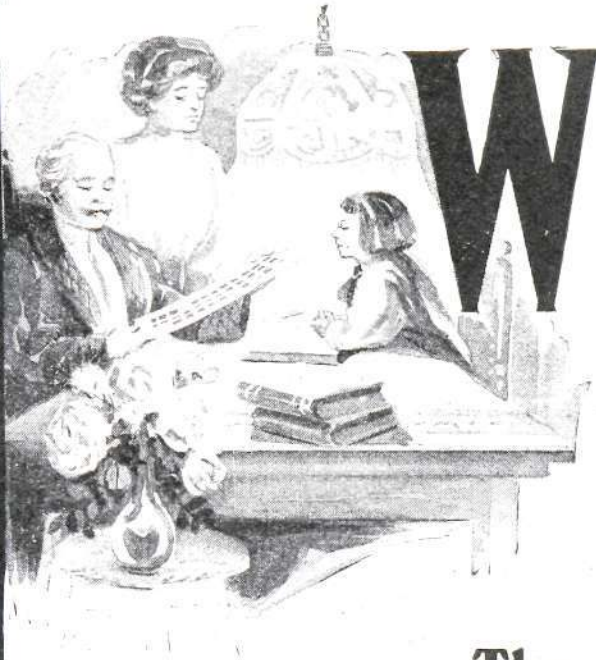
Sales Offices in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Denver, New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and 33 other large cities

Look for this General Electric Monogram, the Guarantee of Excellence on Everything ELECTRICAL

Use Paints made with Oxide of Zinc.



WHEN you select the colors for your house, remember quality also.

Paint, to be satisfactory, must preserve as well as beautify. Colors are durable and paint is permanently protective only if made with Oxide of Zinc.

Does your paint contain Oxide of Zinc?

Oxide of Zinc is unalterable even under the blow pipe

We do not grind Oxide of Zinc in oil.
A list of manufacturers of Oxide of Zinc Paints mailed on request.

The New Jersey Zinc Co.
NATIONAL CITY BANK BUILDING
55 Wall Street, New York

BERTRAND H. FARR'S
New Book of
HARDY PLANT SPECIALTIES

The Peonies, Irises, Delphineums, Phloxes, Columbines, Poppies and other beauties of the famous WYOMISSING NURSERIES are here treated as

FLOWERS WITH PERSONALITIES

The book is unique, especially so in its treatment of Peonies. It gives in condensed form all that is known about this beautiful flower. The list of over 500 varieties has been revised to conform to the official descriptions of the American Peony Society, the notes being prepared in the field while the plants were in bloom and the colors accurately determined by the Society's official chart. It will be found a perfect guide invaluable to the beginner in the selection of a few varieties for a small garden as well as the connoisseur for his more extensive collection.

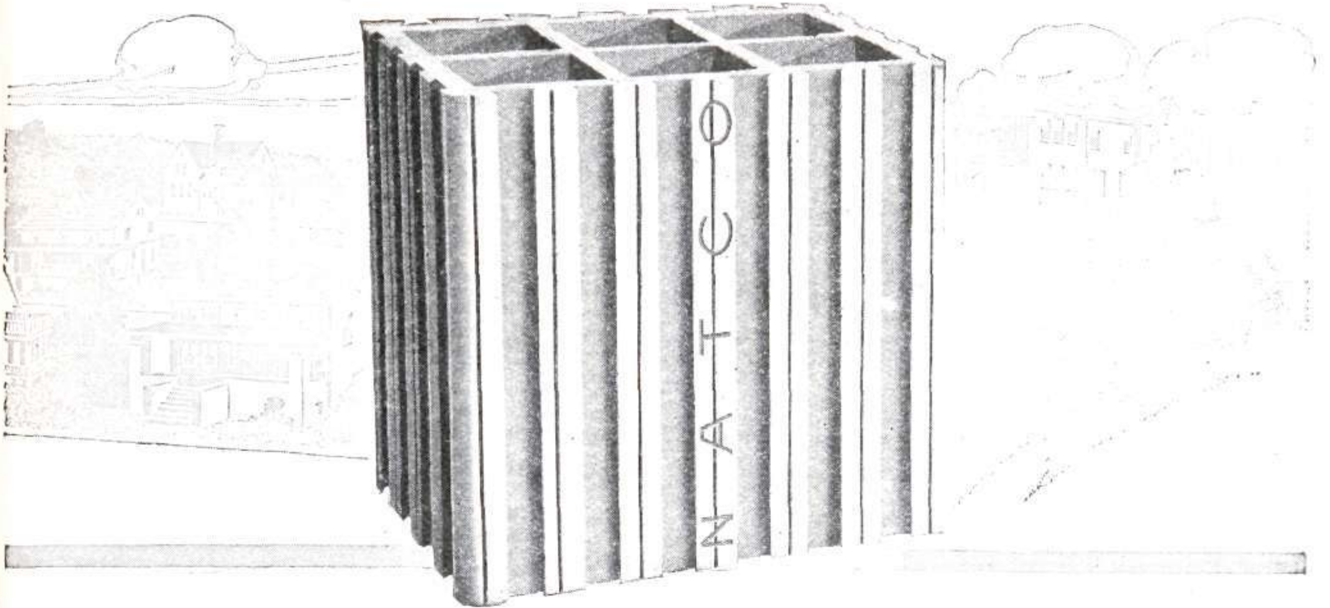
Now is the time to put in your hardy plants so that the roots may make Fall growth, thus gaining a year's time and producing splendid blossoms next year.

Write me fully about your garden troubles. I know every inch of the amateur's road and can help you. And let me send you my new book. IT IS FREE.

Bertrand H. Farr, Wyomissing Nurseries, S. Reading, Penna.

Unless each tile bears the word "NATCO" impressed in the clay, it is not genuine

NATCO HOLLOW TILE



AS a result of the great demand that has developed for NATCO HOLLOW TILE many other concerns have engaged in making products imitating the design and appearance of NATCO.

Samples of such imitations may often compare well with "NATCO" and the argument is invariably lower price. The vital difference becomes clear only in the delivery of the material in quantities for actual construction, and affects for all time the investment worth of the building.

Only genuine "NATCO" has behind it the vast experience and modern equipment of this company, whose methods and materials have fireproofed most of America's great business and public structures.

The cost of "NATCO" is only slightly higher than imitations, but the added living and market values of the resulting building are great.

NATCO HOLLOW TILE is rapidly superseding older forms of construction for all moderate-sized buildings, residence, commercial and industrial. It is fireproof, decay-proof, moisture-proof, vermin-proof. Buildings of "NATCO" are cooler in Summer, warmer in Winter.

Send 10c. in stamps for our elaborate 96-page handbook, "FIREPROOF HOUSES." Every detail of Natco Hollow Tile construction explained, with technical drawings and typical floor plans, also illustrations from photographs of forty-five houses built of Natco Hollow Tile, ranging in cost from $4,000 to $200,000. An invaluable guide to the prospective builder. Write today.

NATIONAL·FIRE·PROOFING·COMPANY

Dept. D Offices in all principal cities. PITTSBURGH, PA.

Here's Something New

No more ashes to lug. No clumsy pan to spill dust and dirt on the kitchen floor

The Glenwood Ash Chute

solves the problem. It is located just beneath the grate and connected by a sheet iron pipe straight down through the kitchen floor to ash barrel in cellar. No part is in sight. Not a particle of dust can escape. Just slide the damper once each day and drop the ashes directly into the ash barrel.

The Dust Tight Cover

to barrel is another entirely new Glenwood Idea and is very ingenious. The Ash Chute is sold complete with barrel and all connections, as illustrated, at a moderate price to fit any cabinet style Glenwood. This is only one of the splendid improvements of the Range without ornamentation or fancy nickel, "The Mission Style" Glenwood. Every essential refined and improved upon. The Broad, Square Oven with perfectly straight sides, is very roomy. The Glenwood oven heat indicator, Improved baking damper, Sectional top, and Revolving grate are each worthy of special mention.

The New Plain Cabinet Glenwood

Up-To-Date Gas Range Attachments

This Range can be had with the latest and most improved Elevated or End Gas Range attachments. It has a powerful hot water front or for country use a Large Copper Reservoir on the end opposite fire box. It can be furnished with fire box at either right or left of oven as ordered. When the Ash Chute cannot be used an Improved Ash Pan is provided. Our handsome booklet tells all about it.

"Makes Cooking Easy"

Glenwood Range

Write for booklet "38" of the Plain Cabinet Glenwood, mailed free.

Weir Stove Co., Taunton, Mass. Manufacturers of the celebrated Glenwood Coal and Gas Ranges, Parlor Stoves, Furnaces, Water and Steam Boilers.

The Highest Grade Player-Piano in the World Built Completely in One Factory

The Kranich & Bach Player Piano

brings into the home the joys and refining influence of all musical compositions without necessitating any previous musical education.

It immediately endows its owner—without study or practice—with an absolutely technical perfection quite impossible of accomplishment with human hands.

With its marvelous "Tri-Melodeme" and other exclusive devices, all simple and easily operated, it provides means for personal control and expression or interpretation not excelled by the ability of the most famous Concert Pianists.

Let us send, without cost to you, two handsome booklets describing the KRANICH & BACH Player Piano—the most masterfully constructed and exquisitely finished musical instrument of modern times.

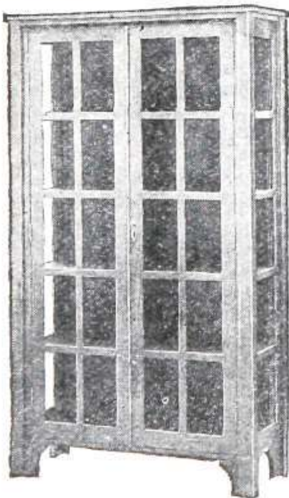
KRANICH & BACH EAST TWENTY-THIRD STREET NEW YORK CITY

LEAVENS FURNITURE

¶Repeated orders from satisfied customers, and their frequent letters of commendation place Leavens' Made Furniture in a class by itself. It is furniture that meets every requirement of the particular purchaser. A large variety of styles, all good, and each purchaser's individual taste in finish, insure the measure of satisfaction that has resulted in a marked increase in sales during the past year.

¶Leavens' Made Furniture is designed on the plain, simple lines that give style and character. It is strong but not clumsy. Each piece has individuality. An inspection of unfinished stock in our ware-rooms shows how good is the material, and how honestly it is built. It is finished to your order if so desired.

¶A package of over two hundred prints and a color chart will show you possibilities for every room in your house. Send for them.



WILLIAM LEAVENS & CO.
MANUFACTURERS,
32 Canal Street, Boston, Mass.

THE BEAUTY OF YOUR SILVERWARE depends on its brilliancy and cleanliness.

ELECTRO Silver Polish SILICON with little effort and small expense will keep it always bright and fresh as new. Electro-Silicon does not scratch or mar, and is free from chemicals. Its exceptional merit has made it famous around the world. Send address for

FREE SAMPLE
Or, 15c. in stamps for full sized box post-paid.
The Electro Silicon Co., 30 Cliff Street, New York.
Sold by Grocers and Druggists Everywhere.

Horsford's Hardy Plants
For Cold Weather

are ready to transplant before the Southern grown stock is ripe. The shorter season ripens off stock earlier and autumn planting begins in August. Shrubs and trees that are not ripe to set before November from the South, are ready in Vermont by the middle of October. You may set your Paeonias and many other herbaceous plants from the middle of August to the middle of September and get quicker results. Horsford's Autumn Supplement offers many inducements to buyers of home-grown lilies, tulips, daffodils, crocuses, trilliums, etc., which are set in autumn. If you could see his various kinds of stock as it is here in the nursery, you would understand why his plants have so good a reputation. Besides he knows how to pack them so they reach you alive and fresh. Ask for catalogues.

Fred'k H. Horsford Charlotte, Vt.

"Gee! This is a mean world."

Globes and Shades
for Electricity or Gas

There are lots of kinds, good and bad, and we make them all. Some smother light, but are decorative and handsome.

Some aren't even handsome.

Alba Bowl
For Semi-Indirect Illumination, Halls, Room Centers, Dining Tables, etc.

But some shades do for electricity and gas just what Macbeth lamp chimneys do for a lamp: make it do its best; get the most light from the current.

They can do this and be decorative at the same time. It is a matter of knowledge. You may have our knowledge if you ask for it.

Our most decorative shade is Iridile, a beautiful irridescent shade, with an unusual degree of reflection. Our most efficient shade is Alba (see illustration). In many forms, it is also highly decorative.

Dealers have, or can get, both Alba and Iridile, and any other shade or globe in our catalogue.

The catalogue shows the different kinds and shapes for home and business, and tells the facts about each. Send for it.

Registered U. S. Patent Office

Macbeth-Evans Glass Company

Pittsburgh

Chicago: 172 West Lake Street
New York: 19 West 30th Street
Philadelphia: 42 South Eighth Street
Toronto: 70 King Street West
Boston: 30 Oliver Street

Italian hand woven grass bleached linen towels-Extensive variety in exclusive designs
"They last a lifetime"

THE JOHN M. CRAPO LINEN STORE
ESTABLISHED 1800
431 - Fifth Ave. NEW YORK.

KEEP THE SKIN CLEAR

With CUTICURA SOAP

And Cuticura Ointment. No other emollients do so much for pimples, blackheads, red, rough and oily skin, itching, scaly scalps, dry, thin and falling hair, chapped hands and shapeless nails. They do even more for skin-tortured and disfigured infants.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, a liberal sample of each, with 32-p. book on the care and treatment of skin and hair will be sent post-free, on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 30F, Boston.

STAR Safety Razor

One Reason— And Others

The illustration was reproduced from a photograph of two Star blades held together by their own magnetic attraction.

Magnetic quality adds to the life, the elasticity of a blade. Every Star blade is heavily magnetized. This is one of the reasons why they give such smooth, clean, comfortable shaves. There are other reasons. Star blades are forged from the finest Sheffield steel. They are hollow ground and concaved—actually perfect blades of the old style, heavy pattern, made to fit a safety frame. They are sold singly, not by the dozen, for one blade will shave for years instead of days.

We have a booklet that tells more about these blades and the Star Safety Razor as a whole. Write for it.

PRICE, Standard Set, $3.75
Others $1.75 to $14.00

KAMPFE BROTHERS
8 Reade Street New York City

REGISTERED U. S. PATENT OFFICE

The Most Artistic and Permanent Building Material in the World

It is economical and suitable for any building worth building.

The "Tapestry" Brick for a $7,000 detached house costs only about $400.

It assures a beautiful exterior without one cent of future outlay for maintenance.

It is really cheaper than wood.

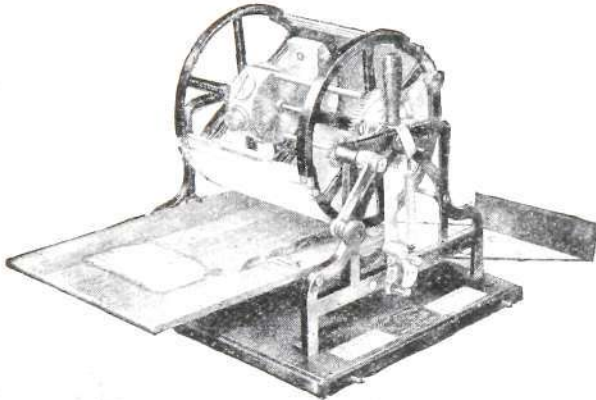
The satisfaction it gives can not be measured.

Write and tell us what you are planning to build; send architects' elevations and our Designing and Color Department will suggest pattern work and color scheme. Send for our books, beautifully illustrated in colors.

FISKE & COMPANY, Inc., 1710 Arena Bldg., New York

Promoters and Designers of Artistic Brickwork.
Sole Manufacturers of "Tapestry" Brick.

Self-Inking Rotary Neostyle



is a Success

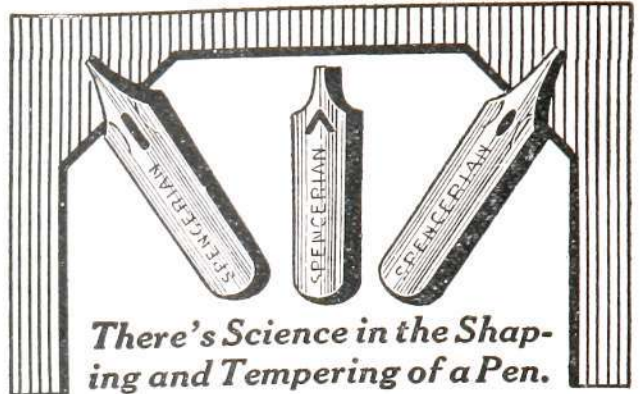
because the Neostyle Company have exacted from their machines, first—good work, then —speed. Every machine represents the highest standard of efficiency.

The Neostyle will print all kinds of office forms, letters, etc., as well as any duplicating machine on the market, and better than many, and print sixty a minute.

For booklet and price, write

Neostyle Co.

30 Reade St., NEW YORK
148 Congress St., BOSTON
232 W. Randolph St., CHICAGO



There's Science in the Shaping and Tempering of a Pen.

SPENCERIAN
STEEL PENS

have the correct design that means even feeding of ink without splotch or splutter; the proper tempering that means just the right combination of elasticity and firmness; and the smooth points that mean easy writing on any paper.

Pick Your Proper Pen

We will send you for 10 cents a card of 12 different pens and 2 good penholders, polished handles, from which you can select a pen that will fit your handwriting.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
349 Broadway, New York.

Your Son a Good Business Man

By taking our mail course in higher Accounting and Business Law your son can perfect himself to hold a responsible position at a good salary.

Our graduates uniformly successful: Help your son to a good start in business by writing today for prospectus.

The International Accountants' Society, Inc.
40 Journal Building Detroit, Mich.

MAKE MONEY Writing Song Poems and musical compositions. Success means fame and cash. No experience necessary. $10,000 recently paid for a popular song. Send us your work or write for FREE PARTICULARS. We want original song poems, with or without music. H. KIRKUS DUGDALE CO., Desk 67, Washington, D. C.

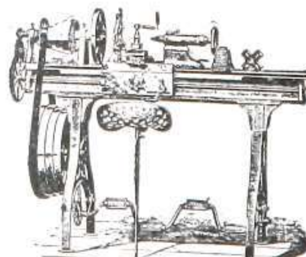
PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED. Free opinion as to patentability. Guide Book, List of Inventions Wanted, and 100 Mechanical Movements free to any address. Patents secured by us advertised free in World's Progress. Sample copy free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.



LATHES

For Gunsmiths, Tool Makers, Experimental and Repair Work, etc.

Lathe Catalogue Free.

W. F. & Jno. Barnes Co.
528 Ruby St., Rockford, Ill.

BAKER-VAWTER COMPANY

STEEL FILING SECTIONS

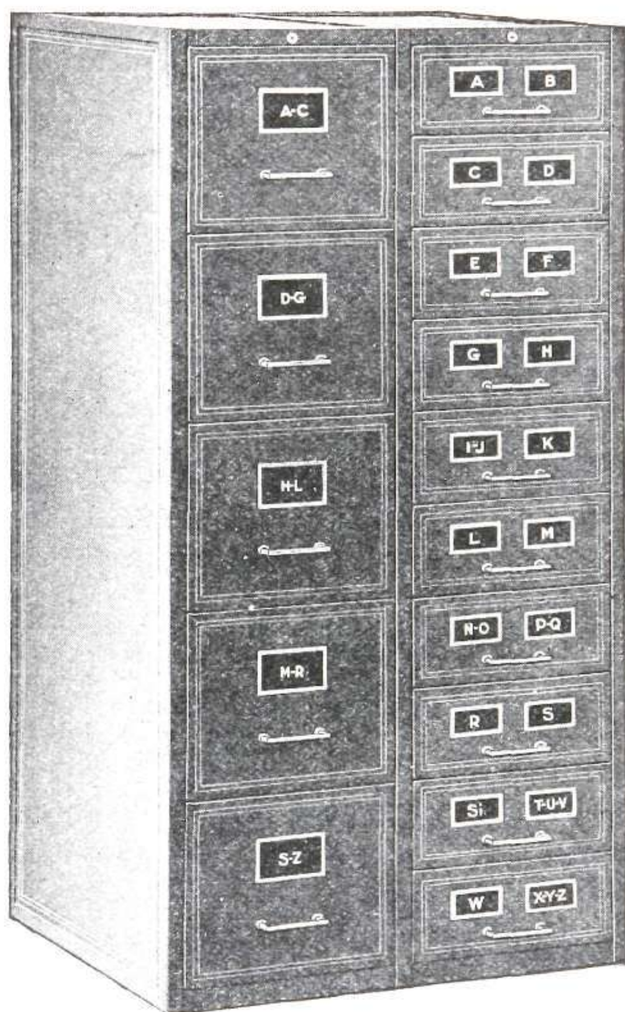
THEIR USE IS AN ECONOMY

IN addition to being rigidly built of steel, with drawers that run with surprising smoothness, they are Rent Savers.

for EVERY SQUARE INCH OF FLOOR SPACE THEY GIVE 25% TO 50% MORE FILING CAPACITY.

Many varieties to choose from—all fire retarding, unaffected by weather, and built for long service.

Ask for information.



5 Drawer Correspondence Section | 10 Drawer 3 x 5 Card Section

Made by

BAKER-VAWTER COMPANY

(Originators of the Loose Leaf Ledger and Manufacturers of Accounting Forms and Binding Devices.)

CHICAGO, ILLS. HOLYOKE, MASS.

Makes Letter-Writing a Pleasure

Writes more smoothly and quickly—with never a scratch or blot. Do better justice to your fine stationery. Use the gliding

Ball-Pointed Pens

The ball makes the writing easier—but not heavier. The only real improvement for years. Ten varieties. Made in England of high-grade Sheffield steel. Silver-grey, $1.00; Gold coated, $1.50 per gross.

At your stationer or sent postpaid by us.

Sample box of 24 by mail—25c

H. BAINBRIDGE & CO.
99 William St.
New York

VELVET GRIP

CORD TYPE — PAD TYPE — NEEDRAW TYPE

Boston Garter

Velvet Grip

Guaranteed Against Imperfections.

Sold by Dealers Everywhere.

Cotton, 25 cents. Silk, 50 cents.

Boston Garter is made in three types shown here, and is recommended for comfort and durability. Look for the trademarks "Boston Garter" and "Velvet Grip" stamped on the loop. Sample pair, postpaid, on receipt of price.
GEORGE FROST CO., MAKERS, BOSTON, MASS.

MENNEN'S

Borated Talcum

FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations

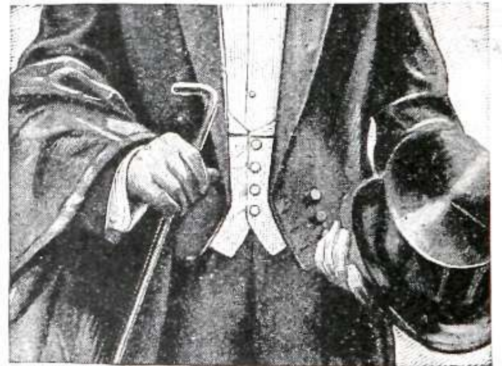
Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.

Trade-Mark

LARTER SHIRT STUDS & Larter Vest Buttons



DISTINCTIVENESS and beauty are not the only features of Larter Vest Buttons that commend them to well-dressed men. They have the famous Larter automatic backs—no parts to separate—can be inserted or removed instantly.

Every Larter Shirt Stud or Vest Button may be identified by this trade-mark on the back. If your jeweler can not supply you, write us for the name of one who can. Write for Illustrated Booklet suggesting correct jewelry for men for all occasions.

LARTER & SONS
25 Maiden Lane, New York

A Larter Vest Button

Showing side view

1847 ROGERS BROS. X S TRIPLE

PRISCILLA PATTERN

This famous trade mark on spoons, forks, etc., guarantees the heaviest triple plate.

"Silver Plate that Wears"

Send for catalogue "K41."

MERIDEN BRITANNIA COMPANY
(International Silver Co., Successor)
NEW YORK CHICAGO MERIDEN, CONN. SAN FRANCISCO

The NEW "SWAN SAFETY" Fountpen

possesses three features that make it the most reliable pen made. It can't leak because the "Screw-down Cap" creates an air-tight chamber around the pen point which makes leaking impossible. It can't blot because the "Ladder Feed" controls the supply of ink, giving the exact amount necessary—no more. Always writes because the "Gold Top Feed" keeps the point of the pen wet with ink which insures instant writing.

Ask any stationer or jeweler to show you a selection of the New "Swan Safety" Fountpens. Price $2.50 and up. Illustrated list showing the different sizes and styles made, sent free on request.

17 Maiden Lane, New York MABIE, TODD & CO. 209 So. State St., Chicago
80 High Holborn, London Manchester, Eng. Paris Brussels Sydney 124 York St., Toronto

CONGRESS CARDS

For Social Play—Art Backs—Exquisite Colors—High Quality
New Designs—Club Indexes—Ideal for Bridge.
Gold Edges—Air-Cushion or Ivory Finish.

50¢ per Pack

OFFICIAL RULES OF CARD GAMES — HOYLE UP-TO-DATE ISSUED YEARLY — SENT FOR 15 CENTS IN STAMPS.
THE U. S. PLAYING CARD CO., CINCINNATI, U.S.A.

BICYCLE CARDS

In Use Throughout the World for General Play
The Most Durable 25 Cent Card Made.
Club Indexes — Air-Cushion or Ivory Finish.

25¢ per Pack

Witt's Can—for Ashes and Garbage outlasts 2 ordinary cans

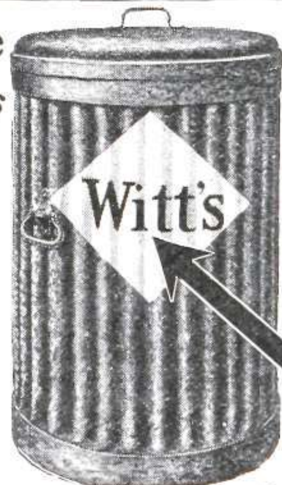
Witt's galvanized, corrugated steel can stands hard knocks—is fire and rustproof, clean and sanitary, keeps in the smells, keeps out dogs, cats, rats and flies.

Look for the yellow label Witt's and the name Witt stamped in the top and bottom. None genuine without it. Three sizes of both can and pail. If your dealer hasn't them, write us and we will see that you are supplied. Address Dept. 6.

THE WITT CORNICE CO.

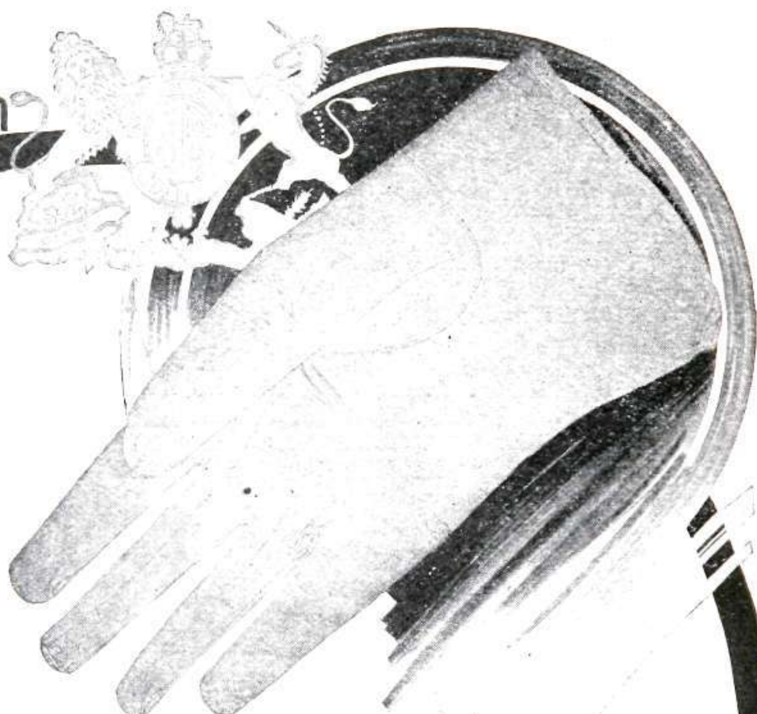
Dept. 6, 2118-2124 Winchell Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio



Look For The Yellow Label

Articles of Wear

You can wear better gloves than those we made for George IV

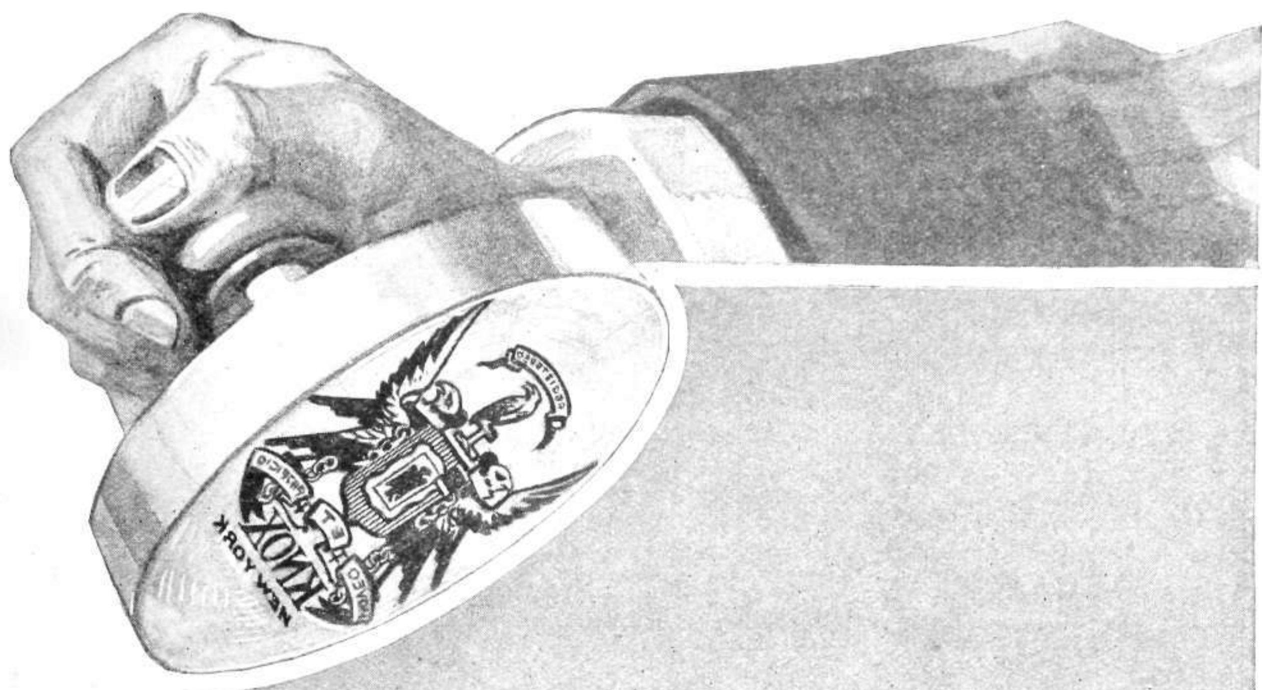


Photograph of one of a pair of gloves made for George IV of England by Fownes Brothers & Co. The mate of this glove was in the possession of Queen Victoria and is still preserved in the royal collection.

The Fownes gloves you may secure to-day at your haberdashers are really far superior in fit, in comfort and in stylish appearance to those we made for King George IV of England. Modern progress in the art of making good gloves is contemporaneous with the progress of the house of Fownes Brothers & Company, founded by John Fownes in 1777. Gloves worn then by princes of the blood would not equal the standard we set now even for the most inexpensive gloves in our line.

FOWNES GLOVES

As an example of a stylish and very durable street glove, we suggest an inspection of the Fownes glove for men selling at $2.00 a pair. Name in wrist and trade mark on clasp identifies the genuine.



Every KNOX Hat has in it this Seal of Approval, and the Indorsement of the man who wears it

The Knox Hat Manufacturing Company

Grand and St. Mark s Avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y.

AGENCIES IN EVERY IMPORTANT CITY IN THE WORLD

Fits the Figure Perfectly-Won't Shrink Always Springs Back to Shape

UNDERWEAR is a necessity—but Wright's Spring-Needle Ribbed Underwear is a luxury at the moderate price of a necessity.—$1.00, $1.50, $2.00 for shirts or drawers; $1.50 to $4.00 for union suits; at all dealers.

WRIGHT'S Spring Needle Ribbed UNDERWEAR

is a wonderfully elastic fabric, permanently springy. Fits any figure perfectly, and keeps its shape under the hardest usage. Very durable. The Non-Stretching Neck (pat. appld. for) ensures neck will always hug snug.

Made in fine Egyptian cotton, all-wool, or cotton-and-wool, in various colors. All weights for all seasons. If not at your dealer's, send us his name and we'll see you are supplied.

Write for booklet showing samples of different fabrics

WRIGHT'S HEALTH UNDERWEAR CO.

Makers of the famous Wright's Health Underwear (all-wool, fleece-lined), and Wright's Spring-Needle Ribbed Underwear.

Made in both two-piece garments and union suits

65 Franklin Street NEW YORK

"THE SPRING IS THE THING"

I will send—as long as they last—my 25c. Book

Strong Arms

For 10c. in stamps or coin

Illustrated with 20 full-page half-tone cuts showing exercises that will quickly develop, beautify and gain great strength in your shoulders, arms and hands, without any apparatus.

PROF. ANTHONY BARKER
1003 Barker Bldg., 110 West 42d St., New York

By F. HOPKINSON SMITH

Kennedy Square

Illustrated. $1.50

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

PARIS GARTERS

PARIS GARTERS

No Metal Can Touch You

Are the universal first choice. They are the handsomest and most durable Garters made and afford the maximum of comfort.

There's a printed guarantee of satisfaction with every pair. Look for the name PARIS on every garter.

A. STEIN & CO., Makers
CHICAGO : : : : U. S. A.

25c and 50c

Duofold
Health Underwear

A sheep wears his wool on the outside. That's where it is in Duofold.

The inner fabric hasn't a thread of wool in it. Only fine cotton or silk touches you. The wool is in the outer fabric. Two light-weight fabrics in one, with air space between the wool and cotton and the two fabrics together weigh less than the ordinary thick one.

Could anything be more scientific and sensible?

Delightfully smooth on the skin; well-ventilated, keeping the body always at an even normal temperature.

Duofold gives the warmth of wool without the "itchy" sensation of wool against the skin; nor the sticky effect of a solid cotton garment. Duofold is always smooth, dry, light and perfectly ventilated.

Single garments and union suits in all weights and various styles for men, women and children. $1.00 and upwards.

Your dealer has them or will get them for you. Write us for Style Booklet.

Duofold Health Underwear Company
Mohawk, N. Y.

Revillon Frères

FOUNDED Furs 1723

THE best merchants handle Revillon Furs; the best dressed women in Europe and America wear them. This label is the mark by which you may know them:

Revillon Frères

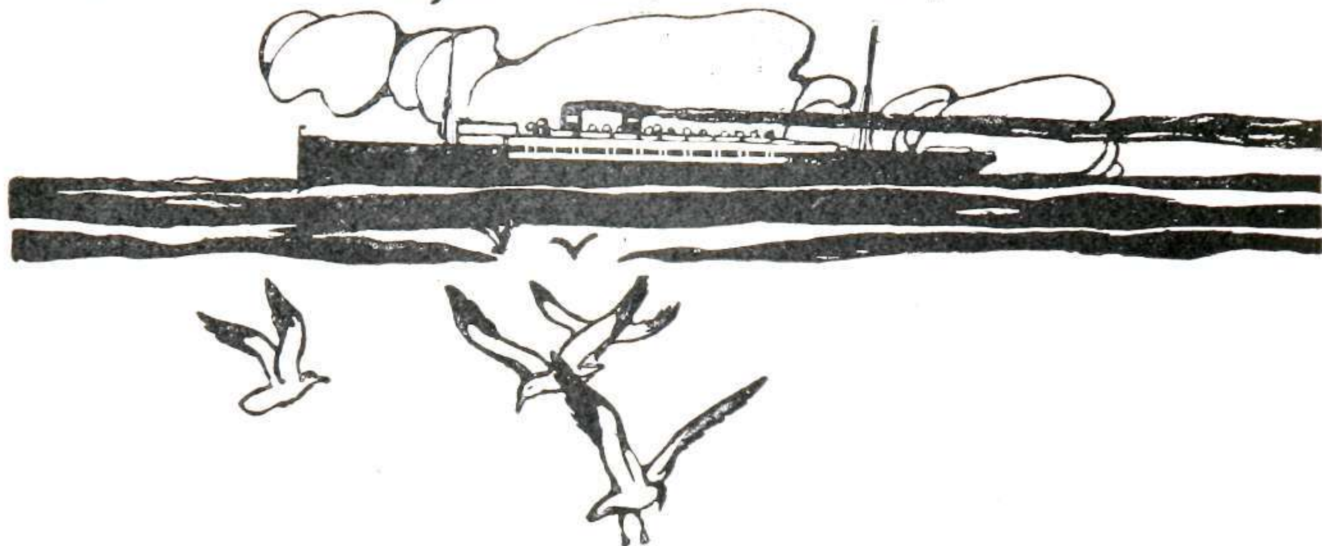
Send postal for Revillon Library, a set of four little books with the following titles:

Fur Trapping in the North — The Oldest Fur House in the World
Furs from Earliest Times — How to Select and Care for Furs

We send books postpaid and give you the name of the nearest dealer who sells Revillon Furs. Address Dept. R.

REVILLON FRÈRES, 19 West 34th Street, New York
Paris London

Travel, Resorts, Tours



LUXURIOUS TRAVEL

WORLD—ORIENT

Select conducted parties to the Mediterranean, Egypt and Orient; also Around the World. Send for programmes.

DE POTTER TOURS CO., Ltd. (32nd Year)
Flatiron Building, New York

ORIENT Parties sail in March, April, May, June, July. Best routes, best management, best testimonials, and the lowest prices in the world. TEMPLE TOURS 8 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. EUROPE

CLARK'S ORIENT CRUISE Steamer "Arabic"

Feb. 1, $400 up for 71 days. All Expenses. | 6 HIGH CLASS ROUND THE WORLD TOURS. Sept. 19; Oct. 21; and Monthly to Jan. inclusive.

F. C. CLARK, - - - - - Times Building, New York.

The Collver Tours "The Best in Travel."

JAPAN, SO. AMERICA, ROUND THE WORLD.
Write for booklet. 22 TRINITY PL., BOSTON.

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION TRAVELERS' CHEQUES

Pay All Bills

with "A. B. A." Cheques, when you travel in America, Europe or any other part of the World. They are the safest, handiest, most satisfactory form of travel funds—"the perfect international exchange."

Write to Bankers Trust Company, 7 Wall Street, New York, for interesting booklet, "The Best Form of Travelers' Funds," and information as to where you can obtain the Cheques in your vicinity.

BUY THEM FROM YOUR OWN BANKER
OR IF HE CANNOT SUPPLY THEM APPLY TO BANKERS TRUST COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

MEDITERRANEAN AND ORIENT
Fall and Winter Tours and Cruises
Write for particulars
Dr. and Mrs. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

"Round the World"

THREE TOURS

leaving during November, February, and March. Four to eight months.

SOUTH AMERICA

A Winter tour of ninety-two days, sailing from New York February 1st, 1912

CALIFORNIA Through trains from New York and Boston frequently during Winter months; also automobile tours through California.

Send for Booklets.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB CO.
Boston New York Philadelphia Pittsburg Detroit

By PRICE COLLIER

The West in the East
From an American Point of View
$1.50 net; postpaid $1.65

"One of the most amusing, suggestive, and thoughtful works of travel that has been written in our time."
—The Spectator, London.

TO THE ORIENT

By the palatial cruising steamer "Victoria Luise"(17,000 tons), sailing from New York, January 30, 1912, on a 78 day cruise to Madeira, Spain, the Mediterranean and the Orient.

Especially equipped with every comfort and luxury of the best modern hotels, to meet the most exacting demands of pleasure cruising—Frahm Anti-rolling tanks insures comfort at sea. Her spacious promenade deck extending from stem to stern is the largest on any ship.

Itinerary includes Lisbon, Cadiz, Gibraltar, Algiers, Genoa, Villefranche, Syracuse, Malta, Port Said, Jaffa, Beyrouth, Piraeus, Kalamki, Smyrna, Constantinople, Messina, Palermo and Naples.

78 days duration of cruise.

Cost including landing and embarking expenses, $325 and up.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN CRUISES

Around the World

SPECIAL NOTICE—Only a few accommodations left for first cruise leaving New York, Oct. 21, 1911 ranging in price from $1,000 to $1,400 including all necessary expenses afloat and ashore. Itinerary includes Madeira, Spain, Italy, Egypt, India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Java, Philippines, China, Japan, Sandwich Islands and Overland American Tour, Inland Excursions and side trips.

Optional tours of 17 days in India, 14 days in Japan.

Two cruises on the Magnificent S.S. Cleveland (17,000 tons), each of 110 days' duration. From New York, Oct. 21, 1911. From San Francisco, Feb. 6, 1912. Now is the time to make your reservations.

The finest, most comprehensive pleasure trip ever offered.

Accommodations on second cruise leaving San Francisco February 6, 1912 from $650 up.

ANNUAL EVENT "Around the World Cruises" will be repeated in November 1912, and February 1913, by the large Cruising Steamship VICTORIA LUISE.

Send for Illustrated Booklet

HAMBURG AMERICAN LINE
41-45 Broadway New York
Philadelphia Pittsburgh Boston Chicago
St. Louis San Francisco

HAMBURG-AMERICAN CRUISES to ITALY and EGYPT

In addition to our regular Mediterranean sailings there will be a Special Trip by the superb transatlantic liner "Kaiserin Auguste Victoria" (25,000 tons) to Madeira, Gibraltar, Riviera, Italy, Egypt and the Nile.

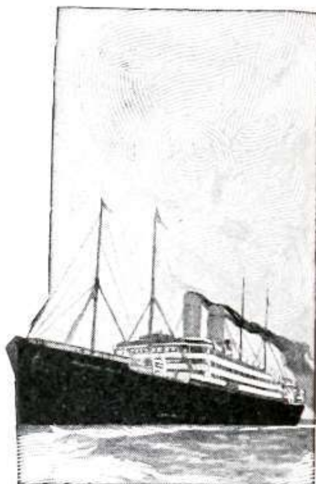
The largest and most luxurious steamer of the Hamburg-American service. Equipped with Ritz-Carlton Restaurant, Palm Garden, Gymnasium, Electric Elevators, etc.

Will leave New York, February 14th, 1912, arriving at Funchal (Madeira) February 21st; Gibraltar, February 23rd; Algiers, February 24th; Villefranche (Nice), February 25th; Genoa, February 26th; Naples, February 28th, and Port Said, March 2nd.

Returning, the "Kaiserin Auguste Victoria" will leave Port Said March 4th for New York, via Naples and Gibraltar.

Time for sight-seeing at each port.
To or from Port Said, $165 and up.
To or from all other ports, $115 and up.



HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
41-45 Broadway - New York

Philadelphia · Pittsburgh · Boston
Chicago · St. Louis · San Francisco

☆WHITE STAR LINE☆

TO THE Glorious Mediterranean

Regular Sailings from New York and Boston
INCLUDING
The Mammoth "Adriatic" and "Cedric"
The Largest British Steamers in the Trade

☆ SPECIAL EARLY WINTER SAILING ☆

Mammoth "ADRIATIC" ☆ DEC. 2
24,541 Tons
725 ft. Long

New York–Madeira–Gibraltar–Algiers–Naples

Superb Equipment ☆ Elevator ☆ Turkish and Electric Baths ☆ Gymnasium ☆ Swimming Pool

☆ MIDWINTER PLEASURE VOYAGES ☆

New York–Riviera–Italy–Egypt
Via Azores, Madeira, Gibraltar, Algiers

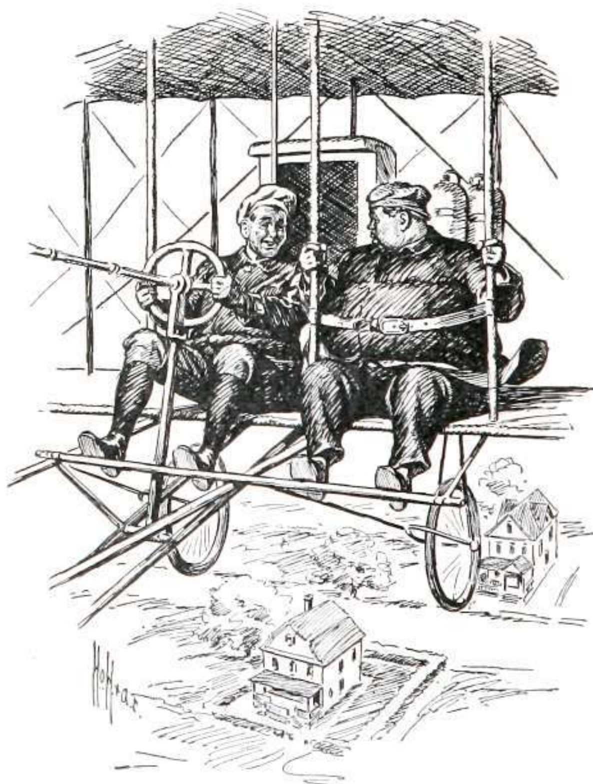
"ADRIATIC" (24,541 TONS)		"CEDRIC" (21,035 TONS)
January	10	January	24
February	21	March	6

FOR FULL DETAILS APPLY TO

9 Broadway, New York · WHITE STAR LINE · 84 State St. Boston

Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, Seattle, Winnipeg, Minneapolis, Toronto, Montreal, New Orleans, Quebec, Halifax.

REASSURING



Nervous Passenger—Doesn't she seem rather wobbly to you?

Aeronaut—That's only because I aint used to her. The guy that generally runs her is in the hospital.

Stevens-Duryea

"Built 'round a principle"

The 1912 Stevens-Duryea Six

The Seventh Year of Stevens-Duryea Six-Cylinder Leadership

It is built around the well-tried, famous Stevens-Duryea principles embodying the Unit Power Plant mounted on "Three Point Support."

If you are interested in closed cars, be sure to investigate the Stevens-Duryea Limousines, Landaulets and Berlines. Interesting literature will be mailed on request.

OR, BETTER STILL, GO TO A STEVENS-DURYEA DEALER, SEE THE CAR ITSELF—AND GET A DEMONSTRATION.

Stevens-Duryea Company, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

POPE QUALITY HAS NEVER BEEN QUESTIONED

After you have satisfied yourself that the

POPE-HARTFORD

Has no superior in any feature

Consider the price $3000.

With Catalogue Equipment

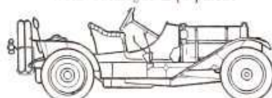
Pleasure Vehicles

Public Service Wagons

Three Ton Trucks

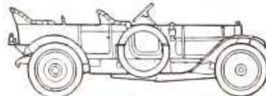
Catalogues on Request

The Pope Manufacturing Company
Hartford, Conn., U. S. A.



With Catalogue Equipment

4 cyl., 50 h. p., $3,000



With Catalogue Equipment

6 cyl., 60 h. p., $4,000

34 YEARS' EXPERIENCE IN THE MANUFACTURE OF HIGHEST GRADE MECHANICAL VEHICLES

Confidence Inspiring Ability

There's exhilaration in a dash into the real country—through the crisp autumn air,—with perhaps a mountain stream to ford at full speed, when you have perfect confidence in your car. The owner of an Oldsmobile enjoys every moment of such a ride, without strain or fatigue... The Oldsmobile is emergency-proof and the more intimate your acquaintance with the car the more confidence you feel in its ability under "out-of-the-ordinary" conditions.

This ability cannot be measured by rated horse-power or a printed list of specifications... For example; while retaining all the manifest advantages of a long-stroke motor,—such as the persistent application of power over varying grades and smoothness of operation,—the Oldsmobile will accelerate under full load; is "quick on its feet" and marvelously responsive to the throttle.

Engine and Chassis

T head Motor: 5 in. bore, 6 in. stroke. Compression release for easy starting. 4-speed transmission with unusually quiet gears. Demountable rims. 3/4 elliptic springs and shock absorber equipment. Improved system of lubrication.

Body and Equipment

Ventilators in fore-doors, an exclusive Oldsmobile feature. Nickel and black enamel finish on metal parts. Regular equipment includes top and slip cover; windshield, speedometer, electric and oil side and rear lamps of new design; tire irons, etc., all of the finest quality.

The "Autocrat," 4-cylinder, $3500
38 x 4½ in. Tires

The "Limited," 6-cylinder, $5000
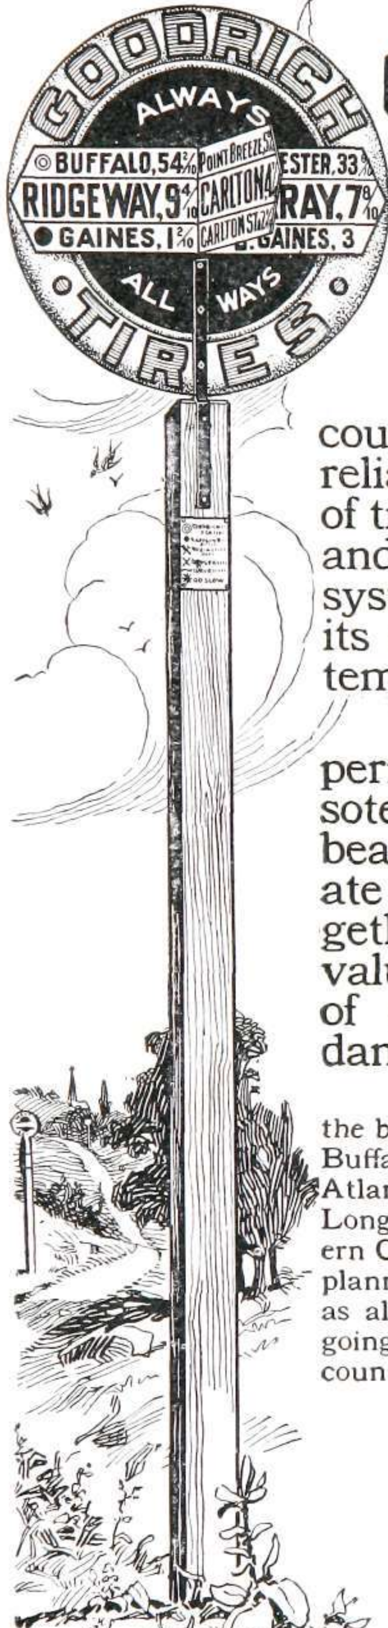
43 x 5 in. Tires

Touring, Roadster, Tourabout and Limousine Bodies

OLDS MOTOR WORKS, LANSING, MICHIGAN

Copyright 1911, Olds Motor Works



The Last Word in GOODRICH SERVICE to the Tourist:- "GOODRICH ROAD MARKERS"

Goodrich service to the public begins, of course, with Goodrich Tires—their quality, their reliability. That service is extended by a system of tire distribution over every state and territory and in Europe. It has been further extended by a system of road marking so broad and thorough in its scope that nothing like it has ever been attempted except in certain districts of France.

The Goodrich Road Marker is a handsome, permanent sign, including a heavy post of creosoted timber, anchored in the ground, bearing a metal disc which gives accurate road distances and directions, together with other information of great value to the tourist; such as the location of gasoline, tire and repair stations; dangerous crossings, grades, etc.

◎	GOODRICH TIRE STATION
●	GASOLINE SUPPLY STATION
⚒	RELIABLE REPAIR SHOP
×	DANGER CROSSING
~	CURVE DANGER
✳	GO SLOW

WARNING!

Key to the Disc Symbol Attached to the Post

These markers have been erected by expert Goodrich crews, over the best touring section of New England; all the way from Cleveland to Buffalo; to Albany and New York City; New York to Philadelphia to Atlantic City, and back to New York by way of Lakewood; throughout Long Island, New Jersey and the Connecticut River Valley; also in Southern California, as far south as the Mexican border. The work has been planned to include all the main transcontinental touring routes, as well as all roads connecting principal cities and towns everywhere. It is going on now and will continue until every tourable highway in the country has been covered by our crews.

Route Books, containing accurate maps, have been prepared covering several important touring sections. Other books are now in preparation. Free on Request.

We are trying to make our Road Markers and Route Book service equal in quality and permanence to "the tires that are

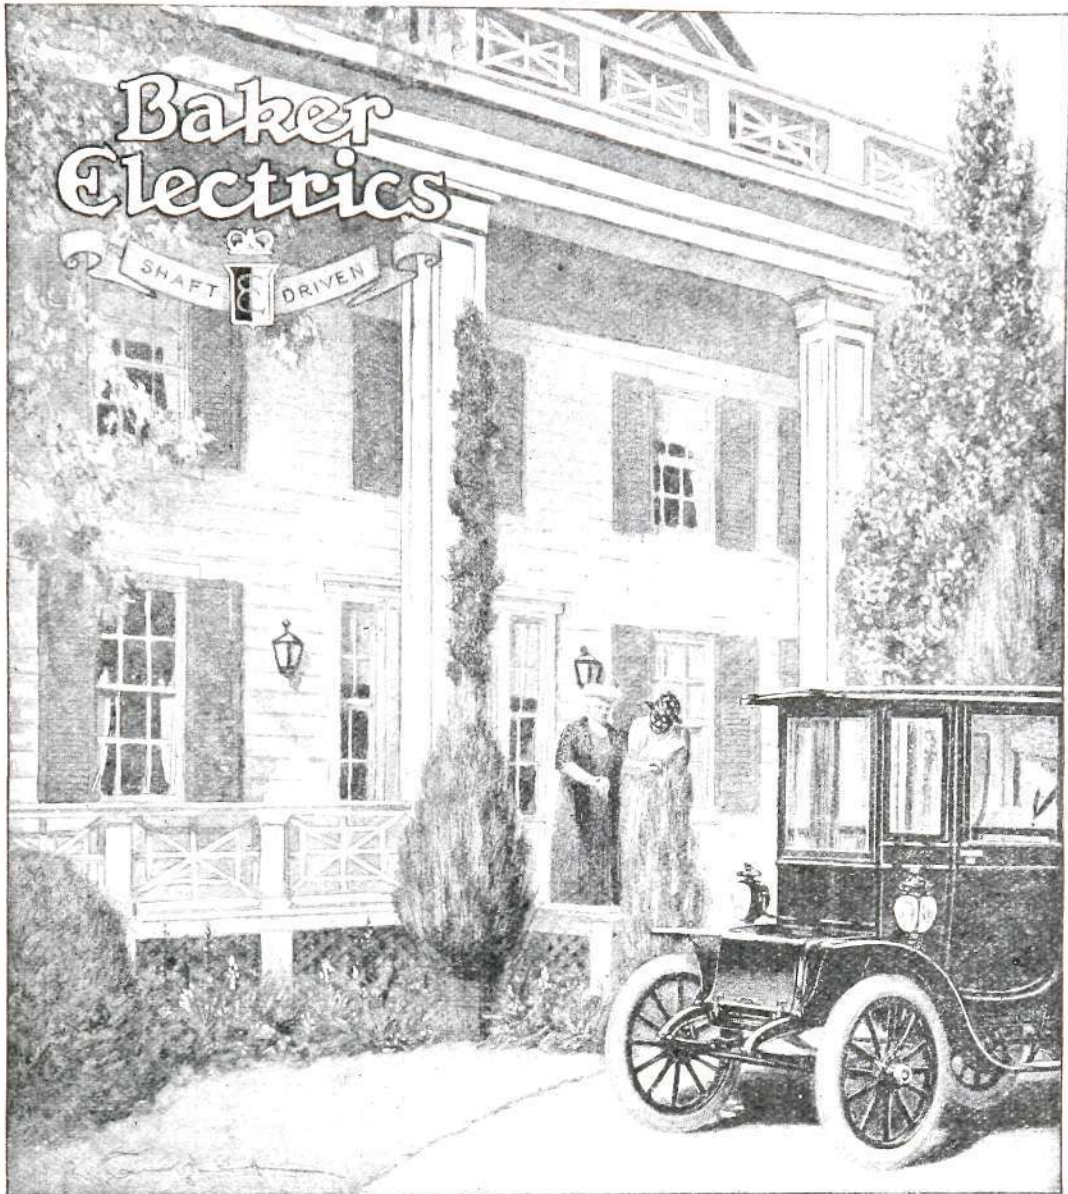
"Best in the Long Run"

The B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, O.

Largest in the World

Branches in all Principal Cities

Wholesale Tire Depots Everywhere



5,000 Baker Electrics in Use

There are five thousand Bakers being operated in this country today—some of them a dozen years old. The earliest models are still giving satisfactory service and will continue to do so for further years to come. The Baker is built to last. Its shaft-driven chassis is a perfect piece of mechanism—silent, frictionless, refined, with mileage records unapproached among electrics.

Equipped with Exide, Ironclad or Edison batteries, the two latter at extra cost. Special Electric Pneumatic or Motz Cushion Tires. See car in salesroom of our dealer in your city, or write us.

THE BAKER MOTOR-VEHICLE COMPANY
54 WEST 80th STREET CLEVELAND, OHIO

Food Products

ORIGINAL—GENUINE

HORLICK'S

Delicious, Invigorating

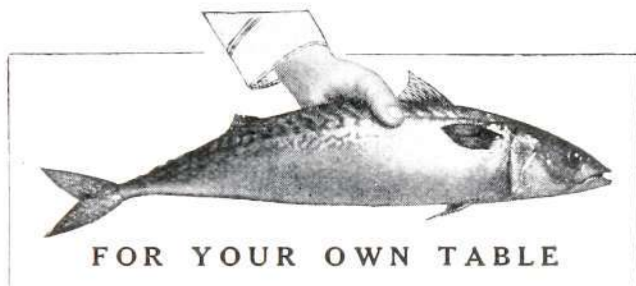
MALTED MILK

The Food-Drink for all ages.
Better than Tea or Coffee.

Rich milk and malted-grain extract, in powder. A quick lunch. Keep it on your sideboard at home.

Avoid Imitations — Ask for "HORLICK'S" — Everywhere

MACKEREL, CODFISH AND LOBSTER



FOR YOUR OWN TABLE

FAMILIES who are fond of OCEAN FISH can be supplied DIRECT from FRANK E. DAVIS FISH COMPANY, GLOUCESTER, the great New England fish market, getting better and later caught fish than any inland dealer could possibly furnish.

We sell ONLY to the CONSUMER DIRECT, never through dealers. We have done a mail-order fish business since 1885, sending goods right to our customers' homes. We PREPAY EXPRESS east of Kansas, and always guarantee complete satisfaction or money refunded. We want to deal with YOU on the same terms, no matter how small your orders.

Our SALT MACKEREL are fat, tender, juicy fish. They are fine and you will enjoy them for breakfast this winter.

SALT CODFISH as we prepare it is an appetizing, delicious fish. Just try Salt Cod and Creamed Potatoes. You will like it.

Our CANNED FISH being steam cooked is absolutely fresh and natural and includes the best of everything packed here or abroad.

FRESH LOBSTERS, in parchment-lined cans, go through no process except boiling. Packed solid in whole pieces as soon as taken from the water, they retain the same crispness and natural flavor as when taken from the shell.

CRABMEAT, SHRIMPS, CLAMS, SALMON, TUNNY, SARDINES, and dozens of other dainty and substantial products can always be in your storeroom for use at a moment's notice in the preparation of scores of appetizing, healthful dishes, that perhaps you are now unable to have because you cannot get FRESH OCEAN PRODUCTS at your fish market. We invite your patronage.

Let Gloucester be your Fish Market and Davis be your Fishman.

SEND TO-DAY FOR DESCRIPTIVE PRICE LIST, and you can be enjoying these dishes within a week.

FRANK E. DAVIS FISH COMPANY
19 Central Wharf, Gloucester, Mass.

FOR OCCASIONAL OR HABITUAL CONSTIPATION

BOTTLED AT THE SPRINGS, BUDA PEST, HUNGARY.

Health

"Fat, oil, butter, cream and eggs certainly caused my catarrh and deafness, but your diet of lean meats, green vegetables, fruits, etc. cured me in a few weeks. My brain power and complexion improved tremendously, and I succeeded financially." . . . Different classes of foods cause different diseases, but correct combinations cure. Send ten cents for instructive booklets: (1) The Brainy Diet Cure, (2) Diet vs. Drugs, (3) Effects of Foods, (4) Key to Longevity.

G. H. Brinkler, Food Expert, Dept. 23, Washington, D. C.

SOME FOOD ADVERTISERS allow themselves to be led into thinking that if one reads a magazine much above the trashiest, one is either a millionaire or a cynic and not to be influenced by advertising. If this were so the greatest and most permanent advertising successes would never have been built up.

CRESCA DELICACIES

Choice things that surprise the sophisticated palate. Grown under foreign skies—distinctive, piquant foods, described with menus, recipes, in our color booklet "Foreign Luncheons," sent for 2c. stamp.
CRESCA COMPANY, Importers, 345 Greenwich St., N.Y.

The Food and Tonic Values of ripened Barley when properly malted and fermented with Saazer Hops is very great. Hence the fame of

ANHEUSER BUSCH'S
Malt-Nutrine

It is not only a liquid food, but when taken with meals produces the fermentation necessary for the digestion of other foods. It conquers Insomnia when taken before retiring.

Pronounced by U. S. Revenue Department a Pure Malt Product
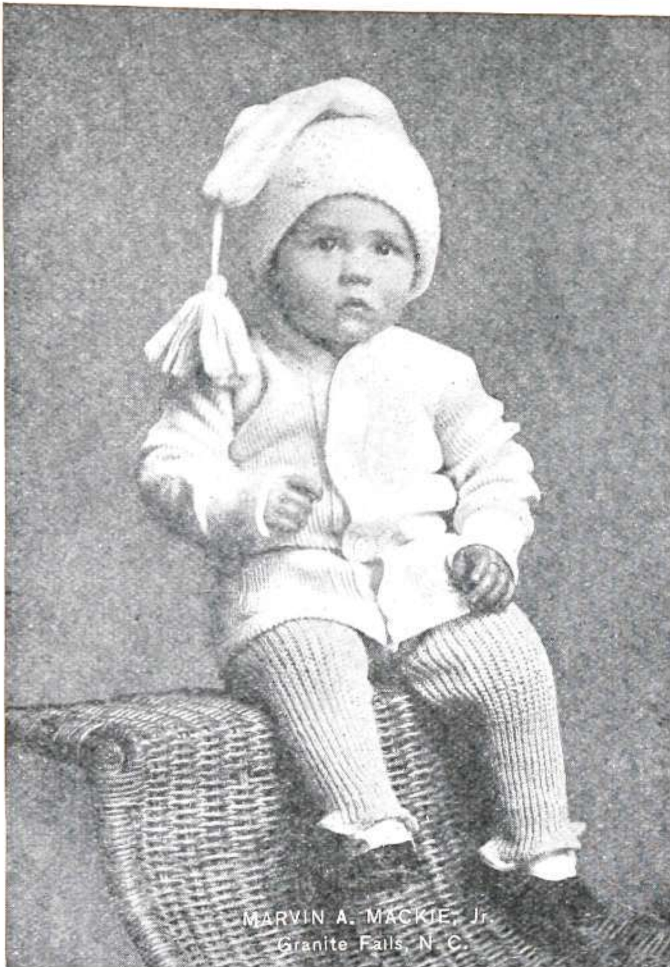
and not an alcoholic beverage. Sold by all druggists and grocers.

ANHEUSER-BUSCH ST. LOUIS, MO.



MELLIN'S

Mellin's Food made cow's milk agree with this baby.

The mother writes: "My baby is growing fast and is strong and healthy. I fed him on cow's milk until he was three months old and it did not agree with him. He got so low we did not think he could live from one hour to the next. The physician advised us to use Mellin's Food and he began to thrive and now is as strong and healthy as any child. I cannot say enough in praise of Mellin's Food."

Mellin's Food will agree with your baby and make him "Strong and Healthy." Write to us, today, for a free sample bottle to try.

Mellin's Food Co. Boston, Mass.

"It's the Finest Fish I Ever Saw"

That is what every one says of our

NABOB BRAND

of Absolutely Boneless Georges

CODFISH

Food with the Ocean Taste

From Ocean to Consumer

The fish from which this is made are caught on those Banks where the best and thickest codfish are found. It is the finest selection of the catch, cut into thick, white, flaky pieces, all bones removed. The fish is carefully packed in an improved hinge-cover box lined with waxed paper.

You can not get fish of a quality like this anywhere except from us.

A trial 4-lb. box, $1.00 (5-lb. box, $1.20; 10-lb. box, $2.35) delivered anywhere in the immediate confines of the United States and at residences where express companies make such deliveries.

Send for price-list of Mackerel, Halibut, Lobster, Sardines and all sorts of salt-water products of the highest quality.

Consumers Fish Company, 76 Commercial Street, Gloucester, Mass.

A COCOA OF RARE QUALITY

The Acknowledged Best in the World

Purity Quality and Flavor Unequalled

Sold by Dealers Everywhere in 25¢ 15¢ and 10¢ Cans

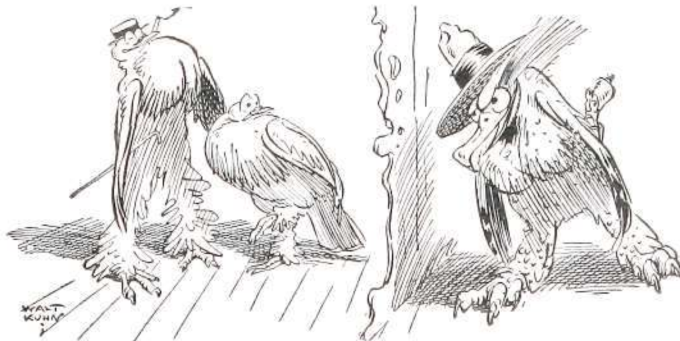
Food, Drink Exercise and Sleep

are the four cardinal principles upon which health depends. Taken in moderation they produce perfect physical conditions.

Evans' Ale

by reason of its natural ingredients promotes a condition of well-being that makes living the priceless joy it is intended to be. It makes "good digestion wait on appetite and health on both." Ask your physician about the good effect Evans' Ale produces. Appetizing, nourishing and satisfying.

In "Splits" as well as regular size bottles
Hotels, Clubs, Restaurants, Saloons, and Dealers
C. H. EVANS & SONS. Established 1786
Brewery and Bottling Works, HUDSON, N. Y.



"O, George! I tremble, if Roger Bloodbeak should see us."
"Fear not little one, should he appear I will tear him wing from limb!"

Great Western EXTRA DRY
Champagne

At Bruxelles Exposition
1910 Received Highest Award
Ever Given an American Wine in Europe!

PLEASANT VALLEY WINE COMPANY
Rheims, New York

DURING 1910. 2,623,412 CHICLETS WERE SOLD EACH DAY

Chiclets
REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

Chiclets are the refinement of chewing gum for people of refinement. Served at swagger luncheons, teas, dinners, card parties. The only chewing gum that ever received the unqualified sanction of best society. It's the peppermint—the true mint.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores
5¢ the Ounce and in 5¢,10¢ and 25¢ Packets
SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY, METROPOLITAN TOWER, NEW YORK

Try It On Steaks

Food not only tastes better, but actually is better when seasoned with world-famed Lea & Perrins Sauce. If you want that rare relish that makes many a dish a feast, use

LEA & PERRINS
SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Lea & Perrins hold the secret of the original recipe which makes the original Worcestershire Sauce unequaled. It is a superior relish for all kinds of Fish, Meats, Game, Salads, Cheese, and Chafing Dish Cooking.

Lea & Perrins' Signature is on Label and Wrapper.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, New York

A Coined Name That Foils Counterfeiters

"Wilburbuds" is a name derived for your benefit. Its use will defeat the foisting upon you of substitutes for the fairest form in which chocolate has ever been offered—the genuine, daintily delicious, meltingly smooth

WILBUR'S
CHOCOLATE BUDS

An Exquisite Example of Wilbur Flavor

TRADE MARK Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.

To merely ask for buds, when you want "Wilburbuds," is to invite disappointment—for many poor chocolates are made to look like, and sell for "Wilburbuds." But remember—no imitation of anything ever equalled the original.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, Wilbur's Buds are put up in boxes—in four sizes: 10c., 25c., half-pound and one pound. If your dealer hasn't them, simply write us. We will send an overflowing pound for a dollar—or a trial box for ten cents.

H. O. WILBUR & SON, Inc., 237 N. Third Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The EVERETT PIANO

One of the three great Pianos of the World

The John Church Company
Cincinnati New York Chicago
Owners of
The Everett Piano Co, Boston

YOU, MADAM, are only interested in the results you can obtain from flour.

The guaranteed Occident Flour is offered to you on a plan that safeguards your interests while you are making a test of its superiority over all other flour.

The Guaranteed

OCCIDENT FLOUR

We guarantee to you that you can bake lighter, more tender, deliciously flavored loaves of bread—whiter, flakier biscuits and more delicious cake and pastry from a bag of Occident Flour than from any other brand.

Costs More—Worth It

Ask your grocer to explain the Money-back plan under which Occident is sold.

Send for our booklet—"Better Baking"—for North—East—West—South.

Russell-Miller Milling Co.
Minneapolis, U. S. A.

Caruso Buys an Angelus

—the only player-piano he has ever bought

THIS cablegram has been received by The Wilcox & White Company from their London representatives, Sir Herbert Marshall & Sons:

"Sold Caruso an Angelus Piano. First and only player-piano he has purchased. Great tribute to artistic supremacy by world's greatest singer."

Signor Caruso made this choice after satisfying himself that no other instrument among the many player-pianos on the market possessed equal flexibility of control or the same marvelous facility of expression for accompanying the human voice in all its work, from the simplest ballad to the most exacting operatic "aria."

In its artistic significance, Signor Caruso's selection of the ANGELUS is one of the most important events in the modern history of music.

There is a vast difference in an artist being given an instrument or being paid to use a particular make for advertising purposes, and his voluntarily coming forward to purchase the instrument he knows to be the best.

This action of the world's greatest singer should serve as a guide to those contemplating the purchase of a player-piano.

THE KNABE-ANGELUS :: THE EMERSON-ANGELUS :: THE ANGELUS PIANO
THE LINDEMAN & SONS ANGELUS
THE GOURLAY-ANGELUS in Canada.

THE WILCOX & WHITE CO., Sole Manufacturers
Established 1877 Meriden, Conn., U. S. A.
Angelus Hall Regent Street London

Caruso in the character of Dick Johnson, in Puccinni's Opera "The Girl of the Golden West"

RECENT improvements in processes of manufacture enable the Gillette Safety Razor Company to announce a razor blade of greater superiority—a blade that will give you a still better shave than any heretofore produced.

These wonderful Gillette Blades, for use exclusively in the Gillette Safety Razor, are now offered to shaving men everywhere as the ultimate achievement in edged steel.

These blades have been evolved during ten years of untiring experimental research in our own laboratories and workshops, in determining the best formula for producing razor steel and in the gradual perfecting of automatic machinery and tempering systems.

The result is a shaving implement of rare quality—uniform, keen, hard and lasting—as near perfection as human ingenuity can approach.

No expense has been spared in bringing about this achievement. In fact, the recent expenditure of $170,000.00 on special blade machinery has largely made possible the matchless Gillette Blades we are now marketing.

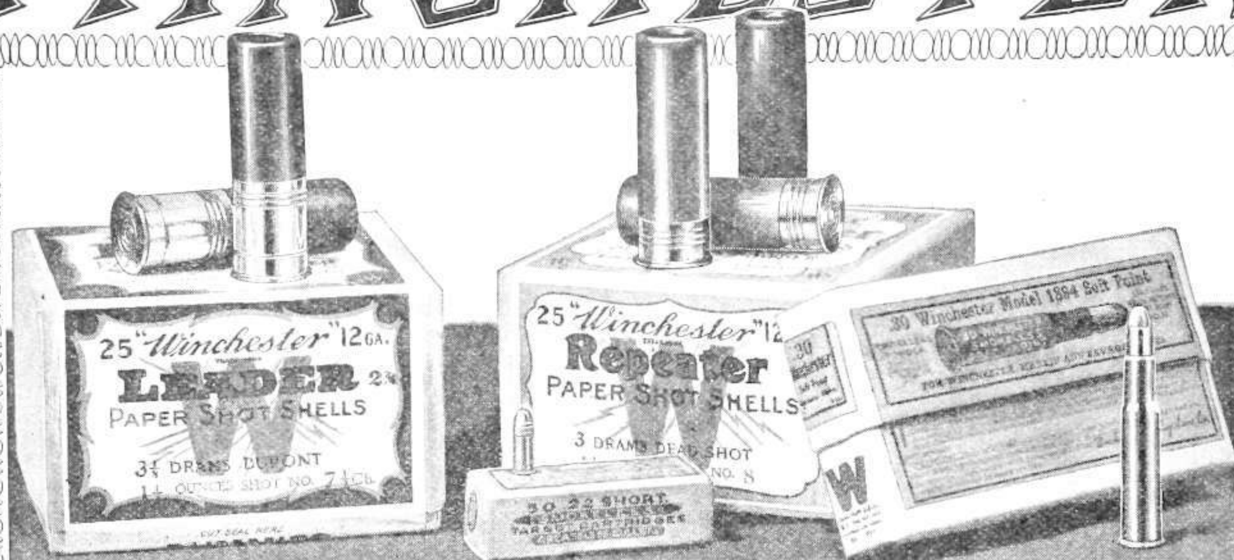
The Gillette Blade eliminates stropping and honing—an irksome, wasteful and ofttimes hopeless task for the man who shaves. This enormously important feature is the fundamental principle of the Gillette Safety Razor, and has done more than anything else to popularize self-shaving all over the world.

King C Gillette

Try the Gillette Safety Razor—and Shaving Comfort

GILLETTE SALES CO.
74 West Second Street
Boston, Mass.
September 1, 1911

WINCHESTER



Cartridges Win The U. S. Government Test

THE RED W BRAND

EXPERTS FIND THEM "THE MOST ACCURATE"

THE tests held recently by the Board of Government Experts to determine the best ammunition resulted in Winchester rifle cartridges again being found superior to all other makes. All Winchester cartridges from the tiny .22 to the big .50 caliber, and all Winchester shotgun shells, are made with the same care, under the same scientific supervision, and of the same high class of materials as the Winchester rifle cartridges which have won the Government tests two years in succession.

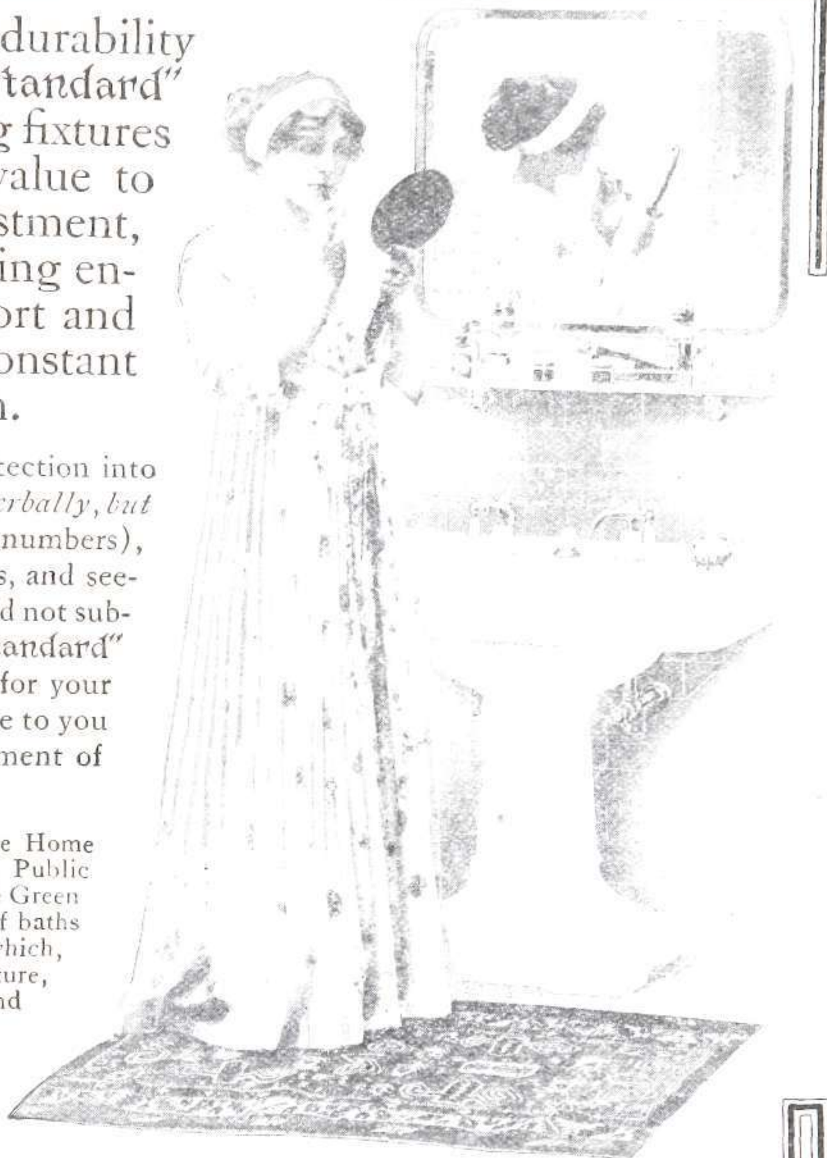
WINCHESTER RIFLE AND PISTOL CARTRIDGES are uniform and reliable. Their accuracy, velocity and penetration are unequalled. They are always effective for shooting small game, big game, dangerous game, and for target practice or protection. Use them and attain your highest degree of shooting efficiency.

WINCHESTER LOADED SHOTGUN SHELLS are made with the Winchester Patent Corrugated Head, which is far superior to the old English system of metal lining, discarded in Winchester shells years ago. Uniform and sure primers prevent misfires, and the use of the best combinations of the highest grades of powder, shot and wadding insures even patterns, good penetration and high velocity.

Red W Brand of Ammunition Is Sold Everywhere

"Standard"
GUARANTEED PLUMBING FIXTURES

BECAUSE of their durability and efficiency "Standard" guaranteed plumbing fixtures never cease to add value to your building investment, as long as your building endures. Their comfort and convenience are a constant source of satisfaction.



Build permanent sanitary protection into your home by specifying, not verbally, but in writing (using catalogue numbers), "Standard" plumbing fixtures, and seeing to it personally that they, and not substitutes, are installed. Each "Standard" fixture bears a guarantee label for your protection. It is the assurance to you of modern and sanitary equipment of the highest quality.

Genuine "Standard" fixtures for the Home and for Schools, Office Buildings, Public Institutions, etc., are identified by the Green and Gold Label with the exception of baths bearing the Red and Black Label which, while of the first quality of manufacture, have a slightly thinner enameling, and thus meet the requirements of those who demand "Standard" quality at less expense. All "Standard" fixtures with care will last a lifetime. And, no fixture is genuine unless it bears the guarantee label.

Send for a copy of our beautiful catalog "Modern Bathrooms." It will prove of invaluable assistance in the planning of your bathroom, kitchen or laundry. Many model rooms are illustrated, costing from $78 to $600. This valuable book is sent for 6 cents postage.

Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. Dept. C PITTSBURGH, PA.

New York............35 W. 31st Street
Chicago............415 Ashland Block
Philadelphia........1128 Walnut Street
Toronto, Can.......59 Richmond St., E.
Pittsburgh..............106 Sixth Street
St. Louis..........100 N. Fourth Street
Nashville........315 Tenth Avenue, So.
New Orleans, Baronne and St. Joseph Sts.
Montreal, Can.......215 Coristine Bldg.
Boston............John Hancock Bldg.
Louisville........319-23 W. Main Street
Cleveland........648 Huron Road, S. E.
London........53 Holborn Viaduct, E. C.
Houston, Tex., Preston and Smith Streets
San Francisco, Metropolis Bank Building
Washington, D. C.......Southern Bldg.
Toledo, Ohio........311-321 Erie Street
Fort Worth, Tex., cor. Front and Jones Sts.

Oswego Serge is a staple, year-round fabric for men's wear, a Serge-at-its-best, which—owing to its dependability—has been produced year after year in increasing quantity by the American Woolen Company

Wm. M. Wood, President.

Oswego Serge grows in popular favor, possessing those characteristics which appeal to well dressed men, and stamp serge as the fabric of universal wear.

You seek style, fit and finish. Let us speak for Oswego Serge—a masterpiece of the loom, possessing wear, feel, hang and finish. Made of finest wool, and—quality considered—priced low.

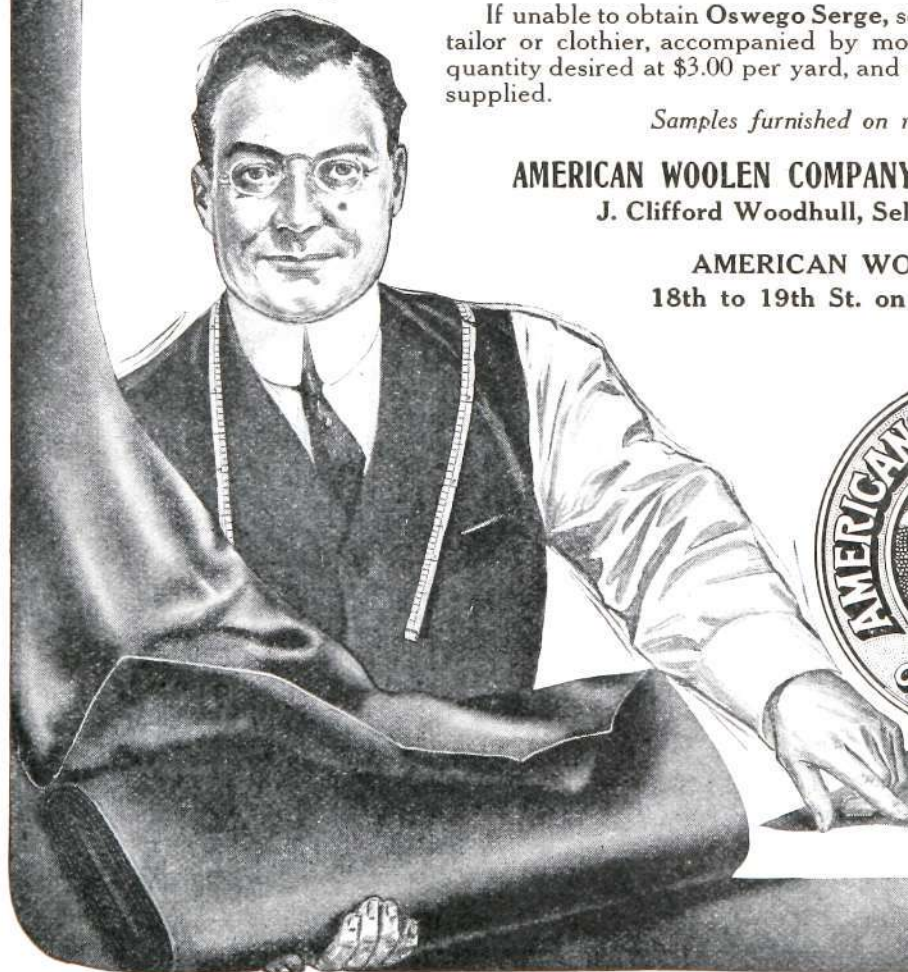
In order to be sure of the cloth when ordering a custom suit from your tailor, or a ready-to-wear suit from your clothier, insist on Oswego Serge.

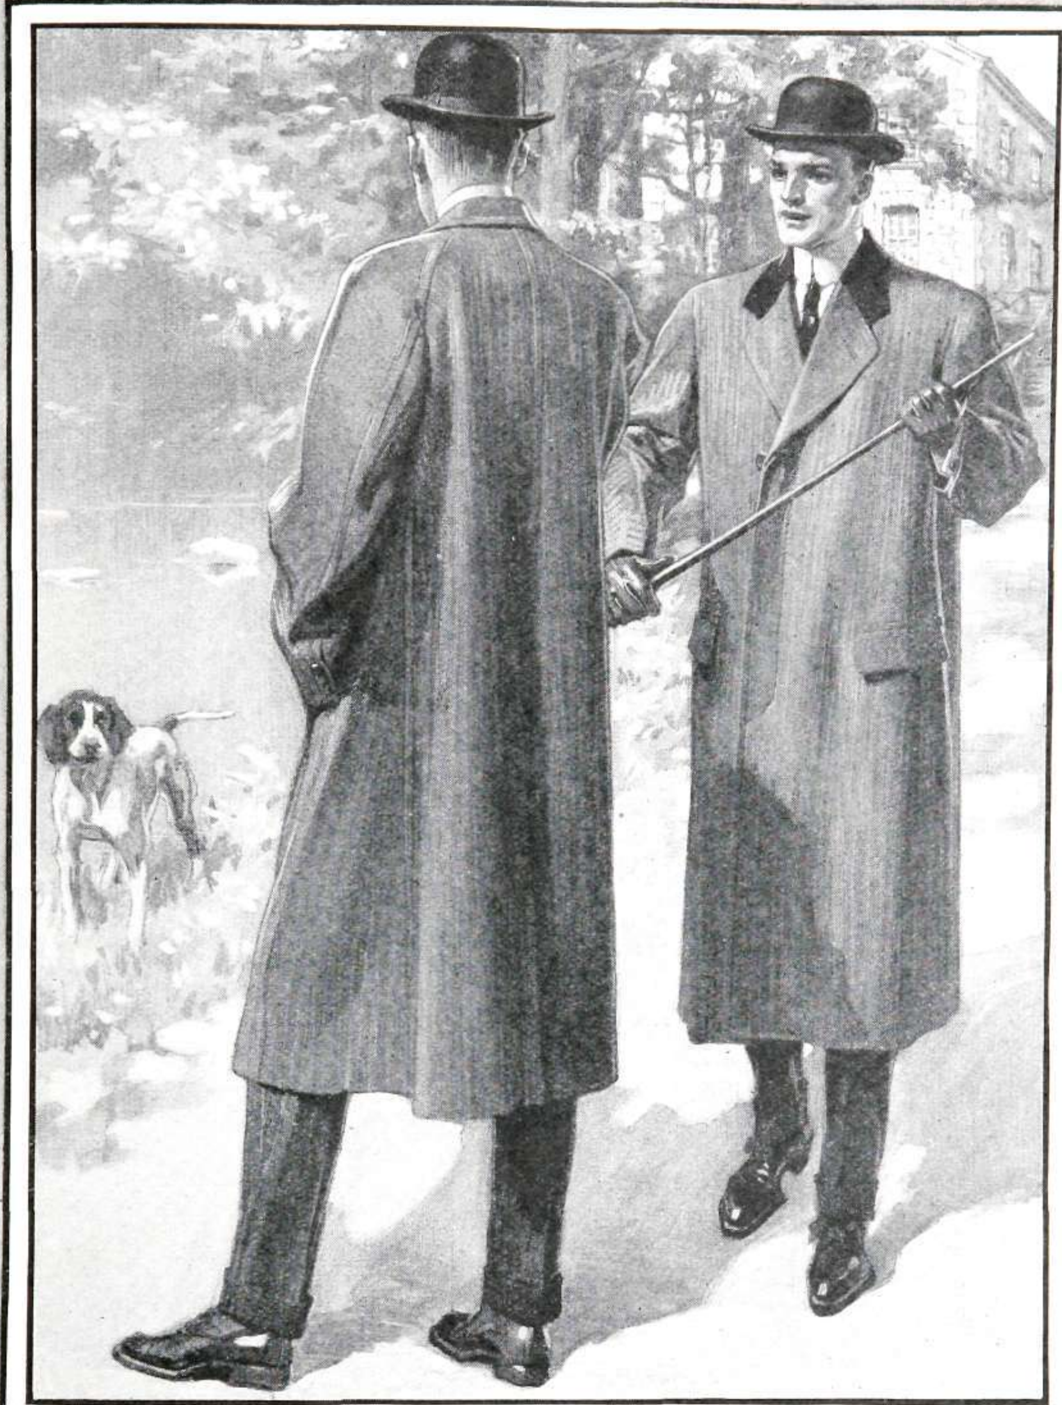
If unable to obtain Oswego Serge, send us the name of your tailor or clothier, accompanied by money order or check for quantity desired at $3.00 per yard, and we will see that you are supplied.

Samples furnished on request.

AMERICAN WOOLEN COMPANY OF NEW YORK
J. Clifford Woodhull, Selling Agent

AMERICAN WOOLEN BUILDING
18th to 19th St. on 4th Ave., New York





Scene in Bronx Park, New York

Copyright by Hart Schaffner & Marx

YOU see here the back of our new Raglan overcoat, and the front of the Chesterfield; two very satisfying models.

That's the kind of style we offer; in all-wool fabrics; and the best tailoring. Our Style Book for fall shows others

Hart Schaffner & Marx

Good Clothes Makers

New York Boston Chicago

The Symbol of Household Liberty

Use Ivory Soap for everything—bath, toilet, in the laundry, in the kitchen.

Wash the dishes with Ivory Soap. Clean the refrigerator with it, the cut glass, the silver—everything.

Do this, and see what an improvement there is in the appearance of your home. See, too, how much better your hands look—how much better they feel. They will be as soft and white as if such things as dishpans and washtubs did not exist.

Ivory Soap . . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

(EX) AP2 ,S4

Libby's

for Quality and Goodness

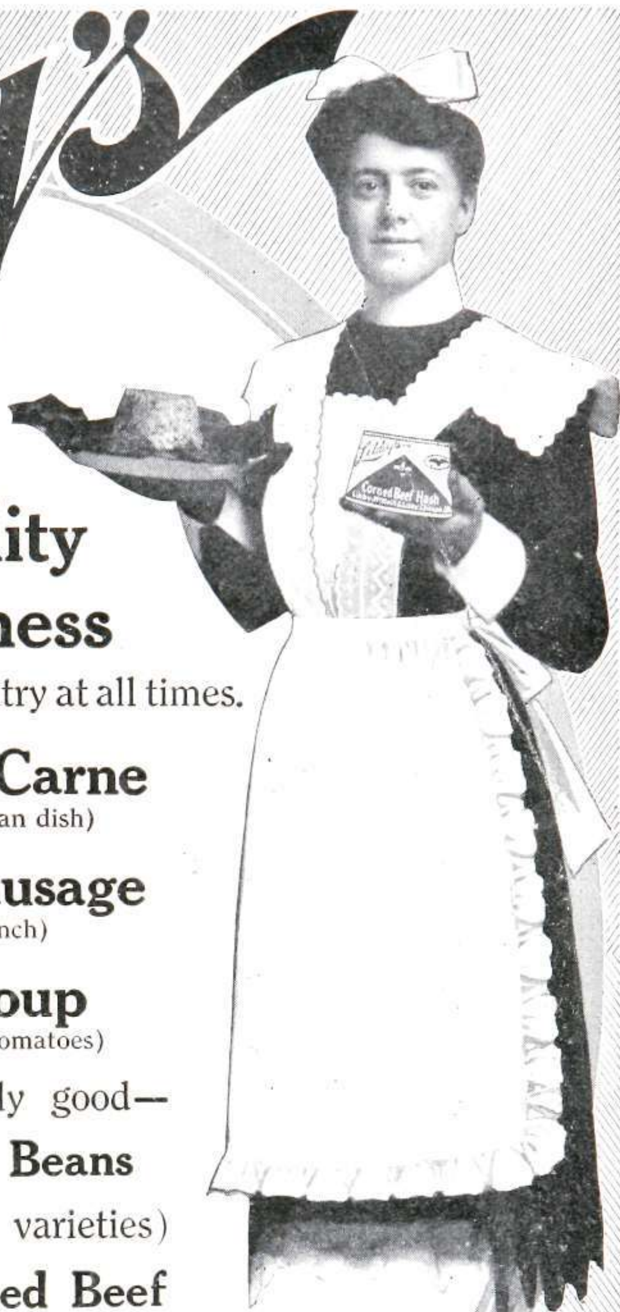
Just the thing to have in the pantry at all times.



Libby's Chili Con Carne
(The perfection of this famous Mexican dish)

Libby's Vienna Sausage
(The proper thing for a Dutch Lunch)

Libby's Tomato Soup
(Made from a special strain of sun-ripened tomatoes)

Other Libby Products equally good—

Pork and Beans

Soups, (all varieties)

Sliced Dried Beef

Order a supply today

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago

At Your Grocer's

THE SCRIBNER PRESS

PURE—DELICIOUS—HEALTHFUL

Baker's Breakfast Cocoa

is the ideal food beverage

The nutritive value of cocoa and chocolate is so great that a well-made cup is in itself a fair luncheon.

53 HIGHEST AWARDS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA

Walter Baker & Co. Ltd.

Established 1780 DORCHESTER, MASS.