A LETTER:

"Please accept $1.00 money order for renewal. * * * *
I can assure you I appreciate the CRISIS and cling to it all the more closely in its espousal of ultra-radicalism. It is religiously needed—we need it awfully in this day of shameful and shameless compromises, apologies and dunkeyism. I can put my finger on every issue of the CRISIS ever printed save the first one and I don't think you could print it in America without my getting a copy. I read it, teach it to my children and preach it to the heathen.

TWO LETTERS

THE ONE WHICH WAS WRITTEN TO MEXICO:
The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Foreign Relations of the De Facto Government of Mexico:

The Government of the United States has viewed with deep concern and increasing disappointment the progress of the revolution in Mexico. Continuous bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years the Mexican republic has been torn with civil strife; the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered non-productive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through the territory contiguous to the United States and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempt at punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice. It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Mexico conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years of civil war.

TWO LETTERS

THE ONE WHICH WAS NOT WRITTEN TO GEORGIA:
The President of the United States to the Governor of the State of Georgia:

The Government of the United States has viewed with deep concern and increasing disappointment the progress of civilization in Georgia. Continuous bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years the State of Georgia has been torn with lawlessness. The lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed. Fifty-six persons have been lynched, property has been destroyed and homes violated. Peaceful citizens have been systematically driven from their homes and occupations. It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Georgia conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years.

If the State Government is unwilling or unable to give its protection by preventing its territory from being the rendezvous and refuge of murderers and plunderers that does not relieve this Government from its duty to take all the steps necessary to safeguard American citizens on American soil. The United States Government cannot and will not allow bands of lawless men to establish themselves within its borders with liberty to kill, burn and plunder American citizens with impunity, and when accused to seek safety within state lines, relying ritory from being the rendezvous and refuge of murderers and plunderers, that does not relieve this Government from its duty to take all the steps necessary to safeguard American citizens on American soil. The United States Government cannot and will not allow bands of lawless men to establish themselves upon its borders with liberty to invade and plunder American territory with impunity, and, when pursued, to seek safety across the Rio Grande, relying upon the plea of their Government that the integrity of the soil of the Mexican republic must not be violated. . . .

Protection of American lives and property, then, in the United States is the first obligation of this Government, and in Mexico is, first, the obligation of Mexico, and, second, the obligation of the United States. In securing this protection along the common boundary the United States has a right to expect the co-operation of its neighboring republic; and yet, instead of taking steps to check or punish the raiders, the de facto Government demurs and objects to measures taken by the United States. The Government of the United States does not wish to believe that the de facto Government approves these marauding attacks, yet, as they continue to be made, they show that the Mexican Government is unable to repress them. This inability, as this Government had had occasion in the past to say, may excuse the failure to check the outrages complained of, but it only makes stronger the duty of the United States to prevent them, for if the Government of Mexico cannot protect the lives and property of Americans, exposed to attack from Mexicans, the Government of the United States is in duty bound, so far as it can, to do so.

Accept, etc., etc.,

ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

upon the plea of their government that State Rights must not be violated. Protection of American lives and property then, in the United States, is the first obligation of this Government, and this protection must extend not simply to white Americans, but also to colored Americans.

Even before my election I hastened to "assure my colored fellow citizens of my earnest wish to see justice done them in every matter, and not mere grudging justice, but justice executed with liberality and cordial good feeling. Every guarantee of our law, every principal of our Constitution, commands this, and our sympathies should also make it easy." Hitherto I have done absolutely nothing to redeem this pledge and I feel that I have waited too long.

In securing this protection the United States has a right to expect the co-operation of the State of Georgia, and yet instead of taking steps to check lynching or punish mobs the State of Georgia demurs and objects to measures taken by the United States. The Government of the United States does not wish to believe that the State of Georgia approves this lawlessness, yet as it continues it shows that the Government of Georgia is unable to repress it. Already thirteen persons have been lynched in the State during the first six months of 1916.

This inability may excuse the failure to check the outrages complained of, but it only makes stronger the duty of the Federal Government to intervene. For if Georgia cannot protect the lives and property of American citizens the United States is in duty bound, so far as it can, to do so.

Accept, etc., etc.,

WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States.
EDITORIAL

Why has Mr. Carranza compelled the United States to use this strong language? Because Mr. Carranza needs the votes of certain murderous Mexicans in the Rotten Borough of Chihuahua.

Why does Mr. Wilson fear to send such a letter as we have outlined above? Because Mr. Wilson needs the votes of certain murderous Americans in the Rotten Borough of Georgia.

Buenas Noches, Messrs. Wilson and Carranza.

CIVILIZATION

The South dislikes the imputation that it is not civilized. It persuades itself that a certain, grand manner among people who have money, accompanied by infinite disdain for the lowly, is culture. Yet the South itself furnishes absolutely unanswerable arguments for pronouncing it half-civilized.

Take, for instance, the matter of the age of consent: In Georgia, North Carolina and Florida a child of ten years may consent to her own ruin; in Tennessee and Mississippi, a child of twelve; and in Alabama, South Carolina and Virginia, a girl of fourteen. Moreover, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Florida and Mississippi have invented a beautiful method of damning the poor and helpless by making a distinction between "chaste" and "unchaste" children, the latter being given the least protection.

Or, take the matter of the insane: Georgia has an asylum euphemistically called a "sanitarium." The death rate in the Negro department is 20 per cent. of all cases "under treatment." The Atlanta Constitution says:

"Some indication of the extraordinarily crowded condition of the sanitarium may be had from the fact that since January 1, 1904, 12,901 cases have been received there, which is nearly 50 per cent. of the total number of patients admitted since it was established seventy-two years ago. And yet, within those twelve years, not one new building has been added and not one modern facility has been provided for taking care of the rapidly increasing population. In a single year, as the trustees' report shows, four hundred and ninety-one white women were admitted to the institution when not a single vacancy existed in that department, while the Negro department has been for several years crowded to double its actual capacity."

CARRIZAL

Carrizal was a glory and a blunder, a joke and a crucifixion; a blunder on the part of a President who sent an army on a fool's errand and on the part of a gay, young officer who needlessly risked human life on the theory that Mexicans always run.

Carrizal was a glory for the Mexicans who dared to defend their country from invasion and for Negro troopers who went singing to their death. And the greater glory was the glory of the black men, for Mexicans died for a land they love, while Negroes sang for a country that despises, cheats and lynchers them. Even across the sunlit desert as they died came the last wild shriek of a human bonfire in Texas where Southern "gentlemen" and "ladies" capered in glee—brave, filthy Texas. Laugh? Why shouldn't they laugh at simple death and grim duty? Have they not faced harsher and more horrible things? "Jim Crow" cars, helpless disfranchisement and organized insult? Why should they not laugh at death for a country which honors them dying and kicks and buffets them living? God laughed. It was a Joke.
THE CRISIS

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

It is peculiarly unfortunate that white Southern influence is so dominant in the National Education Association. Colored teachers attend, but in no large numbers, because little or nothing is done to encourage them. Negro education is practically undiscussed. Every year a representative from either Hampton or Tuskegee is given a chance to speak of industrial education. The other one hundred and forty-eight schools, which educate the overwhelming mass of colored students and the Negro public schools with thirty thousand teachers of Negro youth are unrepresented on the programme and have been unrepresented for years. The work, aims and methods of institutions like Howard University, Fisk University, Atlanta University and a score of others are absolutely ignored, and yet the work of these institutions is unrivaled by any other educational foundations among colored people.

There is little present likelihood of such institutions being able to break through the "Education Trust" and receive a fair hearing, but it is none the less disgraceful that this is the fact.

NET-PAID CIRCULATION

OME of our readers have asked us the meaning of "net-paid circulation." A periodical prints more copies than it sells and mails many copies that are not paid for. "Net-paid circulation" refers to the number of copies each month which are actually sold. It does not include copies sent to exchanges, nor unsold copies returned from dealers, nor copies left in the office.

The average net-paid circulation of THE CRISIS for the first six months of the year 1916 was 37,800. No other colored periodical in the United States reaches or approaches this circulation.

NATIONAL AID

It is a matter of congratulation that a strong committee is at work to push National Aid for Common School Education. The present travesty on decent common school training which is receiving the enthusiastic commendation of the General Education Board and other agencies must soon yield to a real attempt to educate Negro children.

HEALTH

OME time ago when the Atlanta University Conference said that the death rates of the colored people were not excessive as compared with other national, conclusion was hooted by those convinced of the inferiority of the Negro race.

We have before us a pamphlet of the United States Public Health Service in which Assistant Surgeon General Trask comes to this conclusion concerning the death rates of the colored population: "It is believed that the comparison of mortality rates previously discussed shows (1) that the colored death rates of most communities of the United States are not discouragingly high; (2) that they are undoubtedly lower than they have been in the past; (3) that they are as low as many white population groups possessed 20 or 30 years ago, and are in fact as low as some white populations possess at the present time; and (4) that with the economic and industrial progress of the colored population its death rate will gradually approach nearer to that of the white population."

IRELAND

EW colored people know or realize what Ireland has suffered at the hands of England. On the other hand, the open dislike of Irish and colored people in the United States has given the Irish cause little or no sympathy so far as Negroes are concerned.

It happened unfortunately that the first Irish immigration to the United States took place just as the free Negroes of the North were making their most impressive forward movement. Irishmen and black men came, therefore, in bitter industrial competition in such cities as Boston, New York and Philadelphia. Riots and street fights ensued. Irishmen hanged Negroes during the draft riots in New York City, and drove them off the streets in Philadelphia.

But all this is past. Today we must remember that the white slums of Dublin represent more bitter depths of human degradation than the black slums of Charleston and New Orleans, and where human oppression exists there the sympathy of all black hearts must go. The recent Irish revolt may have been foolish, but would to God some of us had sense enough to be fools!

AN ENcouraging OUTLOOK

In looking over the catalog of Atlanta University I was much impressed with the rapid increase in the number of its college graduates. It shows that the number of trained leaders sent out from the collegiate department of that institution, and now serving the nation, has about doubled in the last ten years, and that the number had doubled in the preceding decades; so that the total number is today about four times what it was twenty years ago. Other educational institutions are showing similar results. This means that today the colored population of the United States has nearly twice as many wise and efficient leaders as it had ten years ago, and nearly four times as many as in 1895. This accounts in part for the wonderful progress since the dark days in the nineties, and gives promise of still greater progress in the near future. G. G. B.

PROMPTNESS

PLEASE put this note in the August number of THE CRISIS."

When the above request was being written all the matter to be put in the August CRISIS was already in the hands of the printer.

It is extremely difficult to make many of our readers and generous contributors realize this fact. A monthly magazine is not like a weekly paper which can insert a bit of news to-day and appear to-morrow.

The CRISIS is all written one month before it is put into the hands of the reader. The last matter, for instance, for this August number was in the hands of the printer on the eighth of July, the proof was read and returned by the twelfth of July, and the magazine was mailed on the twentieth of July. It reached readers in New York City on the twenty-first of July, and readers of the Pacific coast about the first of August.

If our contributors will bear this in mind they will greatly help us, and save their own tempers.

PLEASE WRITE US

This month we have rearranged the matter in the CRISIS. Items "Along the Color Line" close instead of open our offering. Our own modest opinions come first and then the opinions of others in article and quotation.

How do you like the change? We really want to know.

Indeed, the constituency of the CRISIS is a rather silent one and does not easily burst into letters. We are anxious, however, to have more frank criticism.

What is it about the CRISIS that you like best, and what do you like least? What do you miss most? How can we better serve the Cause and you?

Please write us.
HARKEN!

O the Members of the N. A. A. C. P. and the public generally this Association appeals most earnestly for support for its anti-lynching crusade. The crime at Waco is a challenge to our American civilization, yes, to every American, and yet it is no worse than many that have come to pass without the punishment of a single guilty person. Somebody must move in this matter; the time is ripe, for Southern sentiment is developing so rapidly against it that it is no longer unpopular to speak out against practices which should arouse our holy horror if they were committed by Turks in Armenia or by Mexicans in Sonora. In what we shall undertake to do we shall have the support and approval of multitudes of Southerners who desire to free their section from the shame the mob has put upon it. It is all the more the duty of Northerners to lead in this matter because our own skirts are not clean. The crimes of Springfield, III., and of Coatesville, Pa., are there to confront us, if any of us should wish to make this a sectional issue.

For the colored people this is an opportunity they ought not to be blind to. It has been the wonder of many of their friends that they have not organized great national movements against this dragging of the judicial ermine in the gutter, for it is a cause that could be made as moving as most of the phases in the anti-slavery struggle. The machinery is now here and the N. A. A. C. P. has a clear-cut program to carry out. It ought to receive $20,000, yes $200,000, every year for this purpose until lynching is ended. We are ready to carry on a nation-wide propaganda. Surely the race that suffers most by the crimes, although the less guilty, ought to come forward and make no end of sacrifices if necessary to stop this particular form of the many outrages to which it is subjected.

Never has this Association made a more earnest appeal; never has it seen the way of usefulness stretch out more clearly before it. Every man and woman whose eyes come upon these lines should make it his or her business to contribute something along these lines. Already dollar bills have begun to come in, but we want more than that. We want hundred dollar bills from churches, lodges, societies, from every gathering at which colored people come together in the belief that they are entitled to all the rights and privileges of the American citizen, first of all the constitutional right to a fair trial before judge and jury. We need this money by August 15. Send it to us before then.

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD,
Treasurer.
THE DRAMA AMONG BLACK FOLK

By W. E. B. DuBOIS

"Hear ye, hear ye! Men of all the Americas, and listen to the tale of the Eldest and Strongest of the Races of men whose faces be Black. Hear ye, hear ye! For lo! Upon this night a world shall pass before your souls, bathed in color, wound with song and set to the dancing of a thousand feet. And this shall be the message of this pageantry: Of the Black man's Gift of Iron to the world; of Ethiopia and her Glory; of the Valley of Humiliation through which God would she pass and of the Vision Everlasting when the Cross of Christ and the Star of Freedom set atop the Pillar of Eternal Light. Men of the world keep silence and in reverence see this holy thing."

This has been the opening cry of the dark and crimson-turbaned Herald in three presentations of the pageant, "The Star of Ethiopia," given by colored people in New York, Washington and Philadelphia before audiences aggregating nearly 35,000 people.

The last of these three pageants was given in Philadelphia during the month of May before audiences of eight thousand. It was in many respects the most perfect of the pageants. For while it lacked the curious thrill and newness of the New York production and the mysterious glamour of shadow, star and sky which made the Washington pageant unforgettable, yet Philadelphia in its smoothness and finish was technically the best. As this last production represents possibly the end of the series it is a fitting time to review this effort.

The Negro is essentially dramatic. His greatest gift to the world has been and will be a gift of art, of appreciation and realization of beauty. Such was his gift to Egypt, even as the dark Herald cried in the second scene of the pageant:

"Hear ye, hear ye! All them that come to know the truth and listen to the tale of the Wisest and Gentlest of the Races of Men whose faces be Black. Hear ye, hear ye! And learn the ancient Glory of Ethiopia, All-Mother of men, whose wonders men forgot. See how beneath the Mountains of the Moon, alike in the Valley of Father Nile and in ancient Negro-land and Atlantis the Black Race ruled and strove and fought and sought the Star of Faith and Freedom even as other races did and do. Fathers of Men and Sires of Children golden, black and brown, keep silence and hear this mighty word."

All through Africa pageantry and dramatic recital is close mingled with religious rites and in America the "Shout" of the church revival is in its essential pure drama. The American Negro early turned toward the theatre. Ira Aldridge, their first great actor, was born in Maryland in 1810 and educated in Glasgow. He became before his death the first of European tragedians, honored and decorated by nearly every European government. There was, of course, no career for him in America. Here by the unbending law of exclusion Negro minstrelsy developed first with white men and then with colored actors.

In later days Cole and Johnson and Williams and Walker lifted minstrelsy by sheer force of genius into the beginning of a new drama. White people refused to support the finest of their new conceptions like the "Red Moon" and the cycle apparently stopped. Recently, however, with the growth of a considerable number of colored theatres and moving picture places, a new and inner demand for Negro drama has arisen which is only partially satisfied by the vaudeville actors. Today in Harlem it is being curiously supplied by setting companies of colored actors to playing recent Broadway successes like "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Today" and "The Escape." The next step will undoubtedly be the slow growth of a new folk drama built around the actual experience of Negro American life.

Already there are beginnings here and there, but especially in Washington, where Nathaniel Guy and Laura Bruce Glenn have been at work, and last year produced Angelina Grimke's strong play, "Rachel."

I seemed to see this development some years ago, and as a kind of beginning I sketched the pageant, the "Star of Ethiopia," in 1911. It was not staged until 1913 at the Emancipation Exposition in New York City. There it was made a part of the Exposition and attempted with three hundred and fifty colored actors. I can feel again the strain of that first attempt and the sound of the voice of the Herald crying:
THE PAGEANT, "STAR OF ETHIOPIA," IN PHILADELPHIA

"Hear ye, hear ye! Eternal Children of the Lord, ye little ones within whose veins the blood of Ethiopia flows and flames. Hear ye, hear ye! And listen to the tale of the Humblest and Mightiest of the Races of Men whose faces be Black. Behold the Star of Faith so nearly lost, yet found again and placed against high heaven through the crucifixion of God and little children. Sons and Daughters of Men keep silence and hear this beautiful thing."

This first pageant was in audience and acting a great success, "An impressive spectacle," as the Outlook said, "both from a historical point of view and as a forecast."

Then came my dream. It seemed to me that it might be possible with such a demonstration to get people interested in this development of Negro drama to teach on the one hand the colored people themselves the meaning of their history and their rich, emotional life through a new theatre, and on the other, to reveal the Negro to the white world as a human, feeling thing. I started out to raise three thousand dollars. By contributing five hundred myself and by the wonderful gift of one young woman I succeeded in raising a little over two thousand dollars in cash; my other pledges failed. With this money the Washington pageant was given in the open air with twelve hundred colored participants. It was a wonderful thing. As one white woman wrote: "It was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen in Washington." And the President of the Board of Education declared it "A remarkable spectacle of great educational value."

But with all this it was financially a partial failure and I found myself at the end with my capital reduced one-half. Yet I looked upon it simply as a certain, mild Valley of Humiliation repeating to myself the words of the Herald at the beginning of the fourth scene:

"Hear ye, hear ye! All ye that come to see the light and listen to the tale of the Bravest and Truest of the Races of Men whose faces be Black! Hear ye, hear ye! And learn how men of Negro blood did suffer the Pains of Death and the Humiliation of Hell, yet did not die. Listen, Mothers of Men and Daughters of Almighty God beneath whose hearts these dark and beautiful children lie and have lain buried—listen and hear this awful thing."

I determined to make one more effort at Philadelphia. Here in celebration of the One Hundredth General Conference of the African M. E. Church the pageant was given the third and perhaps the last time with one thousand and seventy-eight colored actors. It was to all who saw it a Vision Everlasting like to the Herald's cry before the impressive scene:

"Hear ye, hear ye! All them that dwell by the Rivers of Waters and in the beautiful, the Valley of Shadows, and listen to the ending of this tale. Learn, Sisters and Brothers, how above the Fear of God, Labor doth build on Knowledge; how Justice tempers Science and how Beauty shall be crowned in Love beneath the Cross. Listen, O Isles, for all the pageant returns in dance and song to build this Tower of Eternal Light beneath the Star. Keep silence and let your souls sing with this last and latest word."

"It was," says the Friend's Intelligencer, "a signal contribution to the fine art of pageantry." A white woman writes: "The conception is so noble and the dramatic rendering fine and forceful, and all in exquisite taste and great refinement. There was such freedom from self-consciousness in the actors that it seemed as though they were only doing what they were born to do." The North American said it was "cleverly" done. The Record noted "many brilliant and colorful scenes," and a writer in the Public Ledger says: "The intelligent interpretation which the thousand actors in the pageant gave of the author's thought was proof in itself that the Negro is not the mentally torpid individual that prejudiced white folks persist in considering him." A settlement worker wrote: "I wish I could find the words I need to thank you for the beautiful thing you have given us in the pageant, but perhaps my best tribute is the very wordlessness, tear-salted eyes with which I watched it, and shall always remember it. It was not only the pathos and the tragedy of the story that made the tears and the wordlessness, something deeper than that.

"In spite of the hurt, you'll keep right on being a poet, won't you, please?"

And so it ended beautifully and full of satisfaction, due in greatest measure to the genius and devotion of Charles Burroughs, Dora Cole Norman, Richard Brown and Augustus Dill, my chief helpers, and to hundreds of others. And yet, alas, the whole of my little capital is swept away except a thousand dollars inextricably tied up in costumes and properties. What now is the next step? Already there are faint signs: A Shakespeare pageant in Washington and two masques in Cincinnati. Numerous inquiries from elsewhere have come.

The great fact has been demonstrated that pageantry among colored people is not only possible, but in many ways of unsurpassed beauty and can be made a means of uplift and education and the beginning of a folk drama. On the other hand, the white public has shown little or no interest in the movement. The American Pageant Association has been silent, if not actually contemptuous, and there have been within my own race the usual petty but hurting insinuations of personal greed and selfishness as the real incentives behind my efforts. Unless, therefore, from unforeseen and at present unknown sources I receive help and encouragement I shall lay this effort down and bequeath to new hands crying with the last cry of my Herald:

"Hear ye, hear ye! All them that sing before the Lord and forget not the Vision of the Eldest and Strongest of the Races of Men whose faces be Black. Hear ye, hear ye! And remember forever and one day the Star of Ethiopia, All-Mother of Men, who gave the world the Iron Gift and Gift of Faith, the Pain of Humility and Sorrow Song of Pain, and Freedom, Eternal Freedom, underneath the Star. Arise and go, Children of Philadelphia—the Play is done—the Play is done."

"A LAS, My Country! Thou wilt have no need
Of enemy to bring thee to thy doom
If these be they on whom we must rely
To prove the right and honor of our arms."

Thus spake Abdullah, gazing, with sad eyes
And heart fear-stricken, on the motley horde
Of Turks now gathered in with feverish haste
To meet the dread, on-coming Bulgar host.
Truly he spake, for scarce the foes had met
When the wild flight began, the vengeful sword
Of the Bulgarian taking fearful toll
As fleeing thousands fall to rise no more.
Surely the years bring on the fatal day
To that dark land, from whose unhallowed ground
The blood of countless innocents so long
Has cried to God, nor longer cries in vain.

But not alone by war a nation falls.
Tho' she be fair, serene as radiant morn,
Tho' girt by seas, secure in armament,
Let her but spurn the Vision of the Cross;
Tread with contemptuous feet on its command
Of Mercy, Love and Human Brotherhood,
And she, some fateful day, shall have no need
Of enemy to bring her to the dust.
Some day, tho' distant it may be—with God
A thousand years are but as yesterday—
The germs of hate, injustice, violence,
Like an insidious canker in the blood,
Shall eat the nation's vitals. She shall see
Break forth the blood-red tide of anarchy,
Sweeping her plains, laying her cities low,
And bearing on its seething, crimson flood
The wreck of government, of home, and all
The nation's pride, its splendor and its power;
On, with relentless flow, into the sea
Of God's eternal vengeance wide and deep,
But for God's grace! Oh, may it hold thee fast,
My Country, until justice shall prevail
O'er wrong and o'er oppression's cruel power,
And all that makes humanity to mourn.

His pictorial record of news interest and achievement will be published in the Crisis from time to time as we receive suitable pictures.

We want particularly pictures of colored folk in action, living their lives and doing their daily work. We shall be glad to make modest payment for suitable photographs which we accept, on publication.

The four young persons at the top have made distinguished records in school life and are mentioned on pages 194-5.

Below are the surviving black soldiers of the fight at Carrizal. The succeeding pages record interesting meetings and occurrences in colored America.

THE following sketch was written for THE CRISIS by the late Miss Moore. As her successor writes:

Miss Moore was a careful reader of THE CRISIS and I think gave it a place next to Hope and her Bible. She always wanted it sent to her wherever she went.

My life has been closely interwoven, especially with the home life of the colored people because helping home meant helping all departments of life. No slave could have a real home.

My call to this work came January, 1863, when a few lovers of freedom met to rejoice with the Freedmen, but above the shout of victory I saw the helplessness of the freed slave. Little black hands of children with those of their mothers were stretched out beseechingly for help. I did not want to see them—I had other plans for my life—but the vision would not down till I said, "Lord, here am I; send me." I was to graduate in June. As soon after that as possible I left, against all the protests of my aged mother and all my relatives.

My first work was with about eleven hundred women and children on Island Number Ten on the Mississippi River, near Memphis, Tenn. This was one of the camps where the Union Army did their best to help the freed slaves who did not know where to go nor what to do. It was a greatly needed work for which we must never forget to be thankful. No pen of mine can picture their desolation. You must imagine. Soon barrels of clothing were carefully given out. The army gave rations. What did I do? I tried to be a Mother; it has been my work ever since. Those suffering black children soon crept into my heart and their mothers followed. Memory holds them in loving remembrance today.

The soldiers built a rough shed in which we had a Sunday School and also wedged in a little day school. March, 1864, the colony was moved to Helena, Ark., and part were placed on plantations. Many died for want of care. The friends from the North came about this time and established an orphans' home which was a very great blessing. I was a helper in this work. I also taught the colored soldiers. They made such rapid progress that from that day to this I have never lost my enthusiasm for the black race as regards their mental ability. During these fifty years of freedom I have been with the Negroes in loving fellowship in their churches, schools, social gatherings, weddings, funerals—everywhere I have felt sure that he was simply a part of our common humanity and should be treated as such. Indeed I soon learned that the Negro was simply a human being with all the virtues and faults of humanity. It is true their former life and present environment made them a little different from the white race. From that day to this I have never seen the need of special schools, churches, railroads and laws for the Negro. It is an insult to humanity to treat him thus. All that God requires of us is to give the black man, woman and child an equal chance with the white race and he will eventually prove himself their equal. This he has done already to a great extent, while we have made him carry the weight of color and the thought of inferiority has been constantly and unjustly urged upon him. It has taken much of his time and thought to make himself believe they were not true and thereby get courage to try and try again, else he would have been utterly discouraged.
God grant the time may soon come when the white man can have the privilege of taking the Negro by the hand and saying: "Come on, my brother, give no thought to your color; you have in you all the possibilities that I have." Then, and not till then, will the Negro have an equal chance to be and do his best, and not till then will the white man have a fair chance to help his brother rise. We, too, are greatly hindered by this race prejudice which I need not explain here.

I cannot close without asking the privilege of giving a bit of motherly advice. Trust and be thankful, oh so thankful: The outlook is a thousand times better than it was fifty years ago. Great things have been accomplished for which we do thank God and take courage.

I am speaking to a class of strong men and women who have gained their strength by enduring hard things and overcoming discouragements. You have gained this strength to help your weak brother. If you dwell too much on injustice the weak will give up in despair. "Never ask for an easy job, but ask strength to do a hard one." Suffering does develop strength much more than indulgence. Standing on the heights of eighty years and looking back I can truthfully say that what I thought hindered did make me a stronger and better woman. My trials, of which I have had many, I now esteem my greatest blessings. We are placed in this world to seek and to save the lost—to use our strength to help the weak.

Do not be afraid of criticism. Learn from our enemies. They know our weak points better than our friends. The critics have helped me walk straight. Your trials, if borne in the spirit of love and perseverance, will develop a strong, brave and heroic race. It was so in the past; it is so today. There is far more to encourage than to discourage, but the good is not emphasized. A thousand families in this city live in love and harmony. Their names are not in the papers, but in one the husband has killed his wife; this takes wings and is talked of around every fireside.

I have something sweet, good and glorious to tell you about our own dear colored women. It is in my little corner of the vineyard. We call the work Fireside Schools because it is done in homes. In Nashville, our headquarters, we have enrolled about eight hundred colored women and a few men scattered all over the Union, many in rural districts and out of the way places. They, in their quiet, orderly homes, have daily prayer and Bible study and a selected course of reading for each year. By love and works they form their neighbors into little bands that meet weekly to review lessons, the strong to help the weak. Thousands have here learned how to read and in the minds of children is created a thirst for knowledge that may lead to the college. In these blessed homes we grow strong men and women. To create this has been no easy task. The organ of the work is Hope with a circulation of 16,000. These eight hundred homes represent at least ten times eight hundred. The fact we want emphasized is that these women are doing all this without pay and that they are good wives and mothers while they thus help their neighbors. This has been quietly at work for twenty-eight years in this form, but in some form all the fifty years of my service.

Now, farewell. "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."—2 Cor. 13:11.

GUIANA

By H. EVERARD DAVIS

As most of you are doubtless aware this colony, British Guiana, which is our home, is sometimes styled in history and other books "a magnificent colony," and much has been said and written about the great possibilities existing here—that they do exist, is undoubtedly—but to a very great extent lying fallow and undeveloped; and meanwhile, we Guianese also exist—and that only—the reasons? Ah! so many, so varied, so sad. . .

At the last census returns to the 31st December, 1914, the population of this country with its 90,277 square miles was only 309,938, of which 151,083 were colored natives and West Indians, locally distinguished as 118,719 black and 32,364 mixed; 134,463 were East Indians, 10,059 Portuguese, 2,776 Chinese, 3,914 Europeans (white) and 7,643 aboriginal Indians and other races, a very heterogeneous mixture, of which our race is undoubtedly the least progressive; and why? because of the existence of a sad lack of unity and co-operation hitherto; but some, if not all of us, are now awakened, and but need a little help to start us on the way to unification, independence and success . . . and so we appeal to you, our strong and successful brethren, to “give us a hand up.”

In analyzing our political economy we must first peep a little into past history: Years ago, shortly after the time when our ancestors, who were slaves under the lash, were freed—the recollection of which period with all its horror and cruel wrongs still causes us dull pain and sometimes anger—happily not oft remembered though—in order to save the staple industry of this country, which was cane-sugar, and which through the supine weakness and shortsightedness of the mother country’s governmental policy of “open door free trade” was well-nigh ruined; the excuse was made, and possibly with good reason, by the white plantation owners, that the wage demanded by the colored laborer could not profitably be paid by this product, and so rather than abandon the country, the introduction of cheaper labor was decided on, and Portuguese from the Madeiras, Chinese from the British colony of Hong Kong, and lastly East Indians were introduced, generally under some form of indenture, to do the agricultural labor necessary to carry on the sugar industry successfully to compete against the more cheaply produced bounty-fed German and Russian beet-sugar, which the British confectionery manufacturers, in their greed for gain, admitted into the markets of the mother country free, thus placing the produce of their own colonies at a disadvantage and largely contributing to the depression and backwardness and ruin almost of the West Indian Islands and British Guiana.

The Portuguese and Chinese soon gravitated to what seems to be their natural calling: shop-keeping and the lesser forms of commercialism; the East Indian, too, who is still being annually introduced for the sugar plantations, after having served his term of indenture sometimes elects to take advantage of the option of “a grant of land” in lieu of his passage “back home,” and he, too, starts in the race for riches either as a cattle or provision farmer, shop-keeper or money-lender; and in more recent years as a rice farmer and also general merchant of some importance. A considerable percentage of these three races, after having amassed some wealth, trek back with it to their respective homes.

The irony of this cheap-labor immigration matter is, that the colored native, being in the majority, contributes largely to defray the expense of the system, which is more or less under government control, and is paid for out of the public revenue, thereby partly paying for the introduction of a contemporary worker with whom he cannot compete on an economic basis, as the average rate of indentured labor pay is twenty-four cents per day, a sum quite inadequate for the support of any race but the East Indian.

Here, the colored man—which expression I use in the comprehensive American sense and not with our local and insular meaning—benefits to some extent by the prosperity of the sugar industry, as considerable of the overseers, drivers or foremen and laborers on the heavier tasks, the engineers, pan-boilers, dispensers and porters necessary in the manufacture and handling of this product, are colored natives; but the system of introducing cheaper labor outlined above has had the effect of forcing most of us out into other avenues of labor so as to earn a livelihood, away from the plantations and settled coast-lands of our forefathers into the far hinterland where life is more strenuous and trying, with the result that most if not all of the pioneers of the industries of our scarcely developed interior are colored natives—all the gold-diggers, diamond miners, timber and other wood-cutters, charcoal-burners, balata collectors and the army of boat-hands and droghers necessary for the carrying on of these industries are colored men—hard workers, almost daily risking their lives in their duties, mostly honest and industrious, but ill-rewarded, and so to a great extent improvident and wasteful fatalists, living only in the moment, with no hope for the future, no prospects; discontented and envious of their more prosperous brethren, who, sad to have to admit it, are rather intolerant of their poorer and less fortunate kinsfolk—and sadder yet to admit, who are still considerably imbued with the slave fear and worship of the white man, who in consequence takes advantage of this and weans him away from his own, tolerating him so that he can use and also dominate him, and thus keeps the race emasculated and disunited.

Through the fairly liberal education granted us hitherto, and eagerly absorbed by a considerable percentage, most of the professional men here—the lawyers (certainly all of the talent), the medicos, a fair number of the clergymen and all of the school-teachers, are colored; and, too, all of the artisans and tradesmen in every branch—in the government service, of course, all of the high and lucrative positions are the close preserve of the “gentry from home” as they style themselves—only a few positions of importance and the jobs of the lower order, like district postmasters, postmen, messengers and policemen (officers excepted), etc., being filled by the colored natives.

Strange as it may seem, though the constitution which we have been granted for some years now is fairly liberal, and in spite of the fact that almost exclusively in our municipal government, and largely in our administrative government also, we are well represented racially, still we cannot forge ahead;—and this it must honestly be admitted is through a sad lack of co-operation in the past to a very great extent, but also more potently to the lack of money power.

But as before noted an awakening has taken place, and as can be seen from the history-making events recently recorded in the columns of our press, more particularly our colored-owned and colored-run newspaper, The Free Lance, we are being drawn together through the common danger of the unschooling of our children which is threat-uous labor, are colored men. After weeks, or it may be months of arduous pioneering and prospecting “in the bush,” as it is called, a suitable tract of forest country is spotted on; the government is applied to for a grant, which is usually given on the payment of certain fees and the complying with sundry regulations, and everything being in order work is to be commenced; if the operator is able financially unassisted to start, he does so in a slightly advantageous position; if not, he has to take credit from one of the large export merchant houses (white) for which he has to pay well. Labor, skilled to a certain extent, is obtained under contract and registered, provisions and implements are bought from either the European or Portuguese business houses, on which goods a handsome profit is made; and now with a supply of punts, large and small, boats, winches, warps, sling-chains, cattle for hauling, etc., and all the necessary paraphernalia, fellers, squarers and other laborers, operations commence on the grant to prepare for export, let us say, 150 cubic feet of greenheart, the timber which is most in demand (there are dozens of others as good, and easily obtainable); the operator pays five to six cents per cubic foot for felling and squaring, about four to five cents for making timber paths, another four or five cents for hauling to the creeks, another five cents for loading the transporting crafts and superintending, two cents royalty to the government (besides yearly license fees, etc.), costing altogether on the average from twenty to twenty-four cents per foot to put on the loading beach; the operator gets from the merchant-shipper from twenty-six to thirty cents, and he in turn nets from eighty cents to one dollar and twenty cents and so gets rich both from the profits made off the foodstuffs and implements supplied, as well as on the results of the colored man, who has had to barter his energy for a very meagre price.

Lucrative trade can certainly be done in gold, diamonds, sugar and rum, especially by assisting the small peasant farmers with the latter, also in rice, balata, timbers and woods of various kinds, logwood and other products.

A white reputed million-dollar American concern has recently started in operations on lands in the Berbice river in the scientific cultivation and preparation of corn and peas, and also in saw-milling—the labor through which all the profits will be made is colored; if the capital too were also colored men’s how much better it would be!

Granted the chance of a helping hand with money, and with the unification of the colored race here, if not of the whole at first, of even only a strong and intelligent nucleus, our race can and will be uplifted and become successful and strong. Won’t you help this cause?
MR. Vachel Lindsay knows two things, and two things only, about Negroes: The beautiful rhythm of their music and the ugly side of their drunkards and outcasts. From this poverty of material he tries now and then to make a contribution to Negro literature. It goes without saying that he only partially succeeds. His "Booker Washington Trilogy," published in Poetry, shows his defects as well as his genius. The first part is a Negro sermon on "Simon Legree," ending:

"They are playing poker and taking naps, And old Legree is fat and fine; He eats the fire, he drinks the wine— Blood and burning turpentine— Down, down with the Devil."
The second part is "John Brown":

"I've been to Palestine. What did you see in Palestine?
Old John Brown, Old John Brown. And there he sits To judge the world. His hunting-dogs At his feet are curled. His eyes half-closed, But John Brown sees The ends of the earth, The Day of Doom. And his shotgun lies Across his knees— Old John Brown, Old John Brown."
The last of the Trilogy, "King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba," rises to a weird beauty:

"King Solomon he kept the Sabbath holy, And spoke with tongues in prophet-words so mighty— We stamped and whirled and wept and shouted, 'Glory!' We were his people."

Mr. Lindsay explains:

"Ideas are raging through the brains of even the duskiest of the Negro leaders, and one can handle for such an audience almost any large thought he thinks he understands. He can put it into Negro poetry, I maintain, if he is man enough, and still have it Negro poetry. But he must keep his manner bright-colored, full-throated, relaxed and tropical. By manner I do not mean dialect. There are innumerable Pullman porters who speak English in a close approach to the white man's way. But their thoughts and fancies are still straight from the jungle."

All of which is well meant, but some of it is nonsense. Mr. Lindsay knows little of the Negro, and that little is dangerous.

The Stylus Magazine, to be published occasionally at Howard University, seeks to encourage short story writing and poetry. The poems of Otto Bohanan seem to be the only notable contributions:

"O still and faint let be thy footstep's fall; Nor 'rouse again my slumberous silent songs, Lest mute upstarted voices shake the pall With pulsing paeans of uncovered wrongs.

"The broken beauty of my splendid note, Dark-clotted with the ravished blood of me, Lay on my lips—and one wild song shall float! Borne on the winds that sweep my soul from thee."

Mr. Sol T. Plaatje, editor of a native paper in Kimberley, South Africa, has issued through P. S. King & Son, London, and through the Crisis in New York, "Native Life in South Africa." The book is a detailed explanation of the disabilities suffered by natives under the Union of South Africa. It is a most stirring narrative.

"When a man comes to you with stories about a 'growing spirit of justice in South Africa,' ask him if he knows that in 1884 there was a great debate in the Cape Parliament as to whether natives should be permitted to exercise the franchise, and that the ayes had it. Ask him, further, if he thinks that such a proposal could ever be entertained today by any South African Parliament. If he is honest, he will be bound to say, 'No.' Then ask him, 'Where is your growing spirit of justice?'"
The third quarterly number of the Journal of Negro History contains articles on "Colored Freedmen as Slave Owners in Virginia," "The Fugitives of the Pearl," an interesting fugitive slave adventure, "Lorenzo Dow" and "The Attitude of the Free Negro Toward African Colonization."

Papers in the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines on missionary life in West Africa have been issued as a book, "Black Sheep," by Jean K. Mackenzie (Houghton-Mifflin Co.)

CLOUDS

M R. RAY STANNARD BAKER, writing in the World's Work, notes six causes of unrest today among colored people, namely: (1) The enmity of the Democratic administration at Washington. (2) The changed sentiment of the North. (3) Increasing discrimination. (4) Poor educational facilities. (5) Lynching and injustice. (6) Racial slander. He continues:

"Ten years ago the optimistic, constructive, educational program of Booker T. Washington, the emphasis of which was upon duties rather than upon rights, was the dominant movement in the race and had, likewise, the support of the wisest white men, both South and North. It is still, probably, the best influence among the masses of the colored people and still has the support of leading white people. But in one sense it has been too successful. When it started it was thought by many Southern people that its purpose was to produce a kind of super-servant; but it has, instead, turned out independent, upstanding, intelligent men and women who have acquired property, and have come thus into sharper competition with the whites.

"The influence within the race—I am speaking here of Negro public opinion—which is now growing most rapidly is no longer what may be called the Tuskegee movement, valuable as that continues to be, but it is the movement toward agitative organization—the emphasis upon rights rather than upon duties. Ten years ago, this movement was inchoate and confined largely to a few leaders like Dr. Du Bois; today the chief organization, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has a wide membership throughout the country, with many branches, and includes a large proportion of the leading men of the race. It is also supported by a few Northern white men and women. This Association maintains a strong publication called The Crisis, which has the largest circulation of any journal devoted to the interests of the colored people—and has employed men to appear before Congressional and State legislative committees in racial matters.

"The utterances of these leaders, like the editorials of the Negro press—and few white people realize that there are more than four hundred and fifty newspapers and other publications in America devoted exclusively to the interests of colored people, nearly all edited by Negroes—have shown an increasing impatience and boldness of tone. The utter ignorance of the great mass of white Americans as to what is really going on among the colored people of the country is appalling—and dangerous. We forget that there are 10,000,000 of them, one-tenth of our population, and that their strides toward racial self-consciousness in the last twenty years have been marvelous. We have known next to nothing about their constructive development, and have not wanted to know; we have preferred to consider the Negro and all his affairs as beneath notice.

"Such, then, are the influences that are making for unrest and upheaval, and there is no denying their significance or their power."

BLACK SOLDIERS

AMERICAN newspapers have been almost hysterical over the thought that colored soldiers were valiantly removing their Mexican chestnuts from the fire.

"Fearless, faithful, efficient defenders of their country's flag," cries the Cleveland Plaindealer. "Hard fighters and brave men," says the Cleveland Leader. The Syracuse, N. Y., Post Standard "cannot speak too highly of their courage." The Boston Post says that the Tenth Cavalry "sustained the fine reputation men of their color long since won as fighters of stout heart and superb bravery." "Splendid in every respect," says the Milwaukee Free Press.

The Boston Traveler says of Carrizal:

"The graphic story of this one-sided fight, brought back to us by one of its few survivors, Capt. Morey, will become one of our patriotic classics. Schoolboys of coming generations will read how the troopers faced certain death with smiles on their lips; that they joked with one another, and burst into song as they fought their last fight against overwhelming odds.”

With all this there are some curious notes and echoes. Fourteen of the Brownsville soldiers kicked out of the army by President Roosevelt without proven cause, have been restored to rank with back pay. The New York Sun says:

“The truth about the Brownsville raid will never be known, although there were two investigations, one by a military court and the other by Congress, the latter dragging on for more than a year. It was after the first investigation that the battalion was summarily discharged, although most of the men who suffered could have had no hand in ‘shooting up’ Brownsville. Some of them knew nothing about it, and others sinned by silence. The number of soldiers actually guilty of the atrocity must have been small.

“Congress came at last to the relief of the helpless innocent by adopting a resolution directing the President to appoint a board of army officers to make what was practically a third investigation. * * *

“These officers were convinced that fourteen of the old soldiers had nothing to do with the notorious raid, either as principals or accessories.

“And so their dishonorable discharge was struck from the record, and they resumed their rank and places in the army as if the intervening years of stigma had been wiped out.”

Harry Cummings, the colored councilman of Baltimore, offers fifty thousand colored soldiers from Maryland to the Governor, but W. Ashbie Hawkins, replying in the Baltimore American, denies Mr. Cummings’s right to speak for colored Maryland, and says:

“When respectable colored men in this city have difficulty in purchasing or renting homes for themselves and families simply because they are colored, they cannot easily be persuaded to fight to maintain such a condition. It may be wise and prudent to appear thus always ready to cheer for the Stars and Stripes; to simulate a patriotic devotion to land and nation, to affect a readiness to serve and to die for one’s country, but ro man, white or black, can love a city, a state or a nation that restrains and hampers his activities on every hand, and that indorses and perpetuates race friction by class legislation.”

It is this kind of thing that makes the Columbus, O., Evening Dispatch purse its grandmotherly lips and give this impudent advice: “Carrizal is fine, but the only thing sinister about the whole incident is the use that may be made of it in resentment by men of their own color at home because the prejudice exists. These troopers have some of them given their lives to remove the prejudice, but Negroes at home are simply serving to strengthen it again. The latter should know that prejudice is not a thing to be driven; it is rather, a thing to be removed by showing the unreasonableness of it. Until the surviving troopers complain because they had to fight and to suffer, the others should not lift their voices in lamentation. The leaven will work best in silence.”

The Watertown, N. Y., Times is much more explicit and less hypocritical. “It seems a pity,” says the frank editor, “to waste good white men in battle with such a foe. The cost of sacrifice would be more nearly equalized were the job assigned to Negro troops. * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

“An army of a million could probably be easily recruited from the Negroes of this country without drawing much from its industrial strength or commercial life. It is certainly foolish that this great reserve of good soldier material has not been drawn upon and that Congress has not provided that it should be. It is a case where prejudice has stood in the way of the welfare of the nation. * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

“If it comes to a real war we will be sacrificing white blood where Negro blood would, under the conditions, be a more fitting sacrifice, and drawing our skilled labor when unskilled labor was available.”

The name of the delightful old scoundrel who wrote the above is Willard D. McKinstrey. We raise our hats to Willard as the most honest of his fellows.

The Macon, Ga., Daily Telegraph backs up this idea:

“That many potentially fit and able-bodied Negroes of youth can be taken from the Southern States to make up the shortage without interfering with the labor market except to clean it out and better it, while these men, white officered, both commissioned and non-commissioned, can be made into first-class soldiers—for Mexican service.

"There are objections to the idea, serious and worthy objections, but objections reflecting conditions that can possibly be met and minimized by careful planning beforehand and taking stock of the situation with a view to minimizing them."

The Nation asks: "What are these soldiers to say to the news from Waco, as they are told that they must risk their lives to destroy those of the Mexican bandits? What are they to say when they learn that Congress, while increasing the army by more than 100%, is not providing for a single additional colored regiment, and the War department holds that it cannot designate one to be composed of colored soldiers without congressional authority? They know that the four colored regiments are filled to overflowing; that they are the easiest regiments to recruit; that the effort to recruit white soldiers is almost a failure; that their record as soldiers proves them to be of the best material the United States has. What are they to think of all of this, and of the fact that the South's opposition to a federal volunteer army is in part due to its refusal to permit colored men to serve in the militia?"

Listen, finally to the Augusta, Ga., Chronicle replying to one who prefers to have Negroes fight for "their" country: "In the first place, we ought to be just—even to the Negroes. In fact, a white man can afford to be even more than just toward the Negro, for the latter rests under a certain natural handicap that should, and nearly always does, secure for him the 'benefit of the doubt,' so to speak.

"But, in this instance, it is only necessary—in order to be entirely just to the Negro—to merely state and face the facts."

"There are no Negro military companies in the South volunteering for service in Mexico simply because—there are no Negro military companies in the South. And there are no Negro military companies in the South, simply because—the white people of the South have distinctly discouraged the existence of such organizations. We have, in fact, put a ban upon them. * * * *

"But, as for that matter, let's face the facts still a little further. On the very day that the above communication was written Negro troopers—members of the Tenth Cavalry—were the first American soldiers to lose their lives in Mexico since the call to arms was issued. And these were members of the same regiment that 'saved Roosevelt and his Rough Riders at San Juan Hill.' It is conceding nothing at all to be absolutely fair toward the Negro. In fact we owe it to ourselves, as the superior race, to be scrupulously so."

Doesn't it take a wonderful amount of hemming and hawing and apologetic clearing of the throat to enable the mountainous "Superior Race" to emit a very obvious and mouselike bit of truth?

MOTON

THE colored world is loath to believe the truth of this message as reported by the New York Sun: "Major Moton, Booker Washington's successor at Tuskegee, showed his quality, first, when he advised his wife not to travel in a Pullman car in a Jim Crow country, and secondly, when after she was put out of the car he declared that, so far from cherishing resentment, he respected the feeling of the objectors to Mrs. Moton's presence."

The Richmond, Va., Planet is perplexed: "We do not just understand the position of President Moton in the matter. If he has shown a disposition to condone the outrage, then so far as the public is concerned the matter ends. But we cannot believe that he has willingly done so. There is no other course to pursue than to continue to contend for rights denied, even though we are rebuked and disappointed in so doing. No question is ever settled until it is settled right."

The Cincinnati, O., Union is angry: "If the above is true, then Major Moton will rise to fame and fortune, as did his illustrious predecessor. Crooking the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning, brings wealth from the great masses of white people all right, but it also brings a vast amount of contempt. There is so much bowing, cringing and nauseating servility shown by some of our people, is it any wonder that even the twenty-fifth class of white people feel that they are the Lord's anointed, and therefore vastly superior to all colored people?"
The Brooklyn Eagle takes the usual "Copper-head" view:

"To see things in the proper perspective is the highest development of human intelligence. Major Moton, like the late Booker T. Washington, has experienced this development. He was wise in advising his wife and brother not to take a Pullman while traveling through the South. They were unwise in doing otherwise, and perhaps they will be more unwise if they insist on a legal test of their rights. A lawsuit on this issue would do infinite harm to Tuskegee, notwithstanding the sense and sanity of Major Robert Moton."

As a matter of fact, the late Mr. Washington always rode on Pullman cars, and indeed for many years, if not up until the day of his death, held a pass from the Pullman company. And yet, the extraordinary Southern editor of the Morning Telegraph, New York City, presumes to talk like this:

"For nearly twenty years Booker T. Washington lived among the white people of Alabama without antagonizing them. Their traditions, their whole social system, forbade anything like intimacy with the Negro educator, but he commanded their respect. He realized that a people, like an individual, are a social law unto themselves, and that statutory enactments are but a crystallization of community sentiment. He never would have thought of demanding social recognition from his neighbors, and, realizing that the whites were a predominating influence, he did not antagonize any of the laws which on their face are oppressive. It was his mission to educate the black and raise him to a plane which may, perhaps, in the course of time, render all discriminatory regulation useless. He was willing to sacrifice his personal comfort, and even his personal pride, for the larger things of the future. And Washington's memory is cherished not only by his race, but by thousands of white men and women."

Certainly! And this despite the fact that he dined with the President, and was entertained by white men and women all over the North and in Europe. The editor continues:

"Major Moton, the full-blooded Negro who succeeded Washington, seems to be of a different type. He has been a resident of Alabama less than a year, and he is already, through members of his family, defying the laws of the commonwealth."

They did nothing of the sort. There is no law in Alabama that forbids interstate passengers from using Pullman cars, and there can be no such law.

The Southern papers, which assumed the correctness of Mr. Moton's alleged statement, are complacent.

"Major Moton," says the Charlotte, N. C., Observer, "stands the test. It seems that Major Moton had advised his wife and brother against taking a Pullman in the Jim Crow territory, but they were influenced by other counsel and were involved in a disagreeable experience. Major Moton advised that he was born in the South and always respected Southern traditions, and that was all he had to say about it. His attitude in the matter wins him the additional respect of the Southern people and is a guarantee that the fortunes of Tuskegee are safe in his hands."

Northern copperheads, like the New Haven Register, are also "reassured." It says that the South fears the educated Negro:

"What will reassure the South is the educated Negro who gets far enough to grasp the situation somewhat from the white man's point of view. Major Moton seems to do that. His rights? Yes, he does waive those, in a sense. But the result of his waiver will be greater rights, and their recognition. Only concession on both sides can solve this race problem, and it will be a great gain for him if the Negro takes the first step. It is very probable that the position of Major Moton is in advance of that of many of his brothers."

Other Northern papers, like the Chicago Evening Post, are more decent:

"Major Moton is quoted as saying that he bears no resentment against anyone for the treatment accorded his wife. If he were an American he would resent it hotly and the railroad would pay damages. As an Afro-American, he dare not resent it—the law and the sentiment of Alabama are against him. As an Afro-American, he may not act on the impulse of self-respect and chivalry; he must cringe and submit."

Meantime, the facts of the case seem to be pretty clearly established. Mrs. Moton has ridden on Pullman cars and so has her husband and so did Mr. Washington. In this particular case Major Moton arranged for his wife's transportation. After the difficulty an alleged interview with Major Moton was sent out without his knowledge, but with the very cordial knowledge and consent of his white Tuskegee friends. What was he to do? We think he should have denied the interview then and there. Most colored editors seem to agree with us. The colored Birmingham, Ala., Reporter calls his silence "a serious blunder."

Only the Baltimore Afro-American defends Major Moton's attitude:

"Enemies of Major Moton were of the opinion that he must choose between the two supports, both of which were indispensable.

"Doubtless these same enemies regarded it as a triumph when it was reported that Major Moton was in full sympathy with the feeling of the South and has never in any way desired to override public opinion in the matter of racial relations. But if these unsigned and unquoted statements are taken as evidence that Tuskegee's new principal is a traitor to his own people, it will not succeed in estranging those people. If certain exigencies demand that R. R. Moton, as principal of Tuskegee, make certain statements for the benefit of the institution he serves, we need no assurances where R. R. Moton, the man, stands on the same proposition."

POLITICS

The Crisis seems to be getting on the nerves of Colonel James Calloway, who earns his living by writing for the Macon, Ga., Telegraph. We have been honored recently by considerable notice from this gentleman, of which the following is a specimen:

"An article appeared in the Telegraph some weeks since signed 'A Southern Woman.' She claimed to be born in Bibb county. The article was the one in which she 'thanked God for Lincoln,' and the article held up the South to the scorn of the world.

"Du Bois, the Negro editor of the Crisis, a paper full of malignity against Southern whites, especially in Georgia, as he used to live in Atlanta, and was not allowed his Negro propaganda, as in New York, praises this 'Southern woman' and 'thanks God' as heartily for her, as she 'thanked God' for Lincoln. The Crisis reproduces the article signed 'A Southern Woman.' * * * *

"Du Bois is an astute politician. He knows that giving the ballot to Negro women will revive the fifteenth amendment, and he rejoices in the activity of the National Suffrage Association in winning Southern suffragettes to their cause.

"The Crisis fights everything Southern. It, like Alice Paul, wants a political and social revolution in the Southern States. Its leading editorial in the June number is to show that the 'National Association for the Advancement of Colored People' is taking active stand against segregation. The Crisis is very aggressive and is laboring hard for equal suffrage so as to increase the Negro vote. He applauds the article by 'A Southern Woman,' claiming to be a daughter of a Confederate soldier."

The labor unions of Savannah, Ga., are angry with their Mayor:

"Whereas, It has appeared from authentic accounts of the speech of Mayor W. J. Pierpont, of Savannah, at Jacksonville, on Wednesday, January 19, 1916, at the Mayors' Association, that he advocated the employment of Negro labor upon city streets, that he stated that mechanics are indispensable in the building of our cities and in the operation of our factories, and an industrial school for colored youths should be an adjunct of every Southern city. It should teach every trade to Negroes. And "Whereas, In his factory at Savannah, Mr. Pierpont largely employs Negro labor to the exclusion of white men and white engineers and mechanics. Therefore be it

"Resolved, By the Savannah Trades and Labor Assembly that these public utterances by the Mayor of Savannah are inimical to the interests of organized labor in Savannah; that the example he has set in his own factories is not conducive to the advancement of white labor in this community."

The two clippings which follow do not seem to agree, but what difference does that make "among friends." The Greensboro, N. C., News says of the Chicago convention:

"There are more Negro delegates and alternates at this convention than was ever seen at previous gatherings of this kind. * * * These generally can be seen strutting about the most fashionable hotels in the city, smoking cigars, elbowing their way through crowds of white women and in many instances with their arms around the necks of white Republican delegates. It is a sight that has seldom been witnessed by Southern men and one that they prefer not to see again.”

The New York World says:

“In the convention that is soon to assemble in Chicago, fewer than twenty-five Negroes will claim membership, and the seats of many of these are contested. They belong to delegations reduced by the authority of the Republican party itself. The states and race which they undertake to represent are discriminated against in the grand council of republicanism as sharply as by various devices in the election laws of some Southern commonwealths the whites have reduced the colored vote and two constitutional amendments to a nullity.”

GLASS HOUSES

For a number of years a persistent onslaught has been made by white Southern physicians on the Negro race. The Medical Review of Reviews thinks this sort of thing has gone too far.

“The other day a Southern city was investigated. This Baltimore Vice Commission should be of special interest to us, for among its personnel were medical men from Johns Hopkins University: Howell, the professor of physiology; Finney, clinical professor of surgery; and George Walker, associate in surgery—the director of the investigation and writer of the report. This Red-light Report tells of well-to-do and prominent men, with wives and families, systematically pursuing and preying upon the females in their offices, using every possible means, fair and far from fair, to induce these young girls to enter into immoral relations with them; it tells of many unprotected women who resist temptation at first, only to succumb at the end to the persistent wiles of men who are their social and intellectual superiors; it tells of a host of employers who admit they will not employ girls who are too moral; it tells a tale of lust and sexual deceit and whoredom among the most reputable Baltimoreans—it lifts the cover from a never-ceasing cauldron of sensuality and seduction. Baltimore is a city taken in adultery. Yet there is no reason to suppose that Babylon-Baltimore is worse than other places—the twelve hundred pages of this Report are a transcript of the white man’s sexual life anywhere: a record which should prevent him from criticizing other races.

“Before the Emancipation Proclamation, the Southern gentleman came into intimate contact with the Negroes. As a baby he nursed at the bosom of the ‘black mammy,’ and when he grew up, he had intercourse with these women. It mattered not whether she was of tender years or already a wife and mother; wherever he met one of his bondwomen, in the fields or in a cabin, if he wanted her, she was forced to submit. The sexual crimes of the black race against the white, are as nothing when compared to the sexual crimes of the white race against the black; Negroes have raped white women retail, but the white man has raped the colored woman wholesale. . . .

“Let him [i.e., the Negro] remember with a flush of pride that wherever the spirit of fraternity has let down the bars of prejudice, his race has stepped in and taken its place with those who march onward and forward. But we regret to say that the American medical man has done nothing to destroy the barriers of bias. The profession has not yet learned the noble words of the Fugitive Poet:

“There are no creeds to be outlawed, no colors of skin debarred; Mankind is one in its rights and wrongs, one faith, one hope and one guard.’

“There is a shameful chapter in the history of American medicine, and it is headed: The Negro.”

LYNCHING

The Waco, Tex., horror has brought the usual amount of helpless talk. The San Francisco, Cal., Bulletin says:

“A description of life in the United States which omitted lynching would be incomplete. Lynching is an American institution. If immigrants were thoroughly Americanized they would be taught to take part in lynchings and to justify them. The burning of the Negro murderer at Waco, Tex., yesterday, was an unusually shocking instance, but even burnings and torturings are not rare. The South is the worst offender, but there have been lynchings in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and other Northern states, and it has not always been race prejudice which caused them. At times they seem to come from pure bestiality on the part of the lynchers.

"The strangest delusion in connection with lynching is that it is the victim who suffers most. In reality it is the community that is lynched. Waco did more than burn a Negro; she burned her own courage, decency and character, outraged the imaginations of her young people, and smeared a foul disgrace across her civic life. When such things can happen in an American community we have no call to civilize Mexico. Civilization is, at least, as safe in Mexico as it is in Waco, Tex."

The Houston, Tex., Chronicle says:

"There isn't a man who participated in the burning of that Negro who dares to confess it before Governor James E. Ferguson.

"There isn't a man who participated in it who dares tell Woodrow Wilson that he did.

"There isn't a man that participated in it who dares get upon a public platform in any of the ten largest cities of this state and say so.

"That is how bad it is.

"It is so bad that thousands must lie.

"It is so bad that silence must be maintained even though that silence amount to perjury.

"And what will it do to offset this secret creeping evil?

"What will it accomplish that a legal execution wouldn't have accomplished?

"What has brutal punishment ever accomplished?

"The report of this occurrence will go round the world. It is too unusual, too much out of the ordinary, too unbelievable, to be suppressed.

"It can hardly be duplicated in any civilized nation during the past fifty years.

"When has England had a burning even in the most barbarous of her colonial possessions?

"When has France, when has Germany, when has Russia, when has Japan?

"Go to the records, you who think this is a commonplace event; you who can not understand why people are horrified. Go to the records and see how many similar events have occurred in modern times.

"Go to the records and see how many instances you can find where a human being, white, black, yellow, red or any other color, has been burned in the public square of a city of 40,000 people, while a vast concourse of men, women and children looked on, and where there was no power, no sentiment, capable of making an effective protest.

"Remember, this was not in the dead of night; not a secretly planned affair; not an assault on an unprepared jail. It was in the daytime, in the court house, in open and deliberate defiance of law and order.

"Let us not become worried over the delinquencies of others so long as such things can take place within our midst."

THREE MUSICIANS

Mr. R. Nathaniel Dett is in charge of vocal music at Hampton Institute. He is a young pianist of ability and a promising composer whose work has already commanded the attention of musical critics. His “Listen to the Lambs” is especially well known and he has written a number of other works.

He was born in Canada and was graduated from the Oberlin Conservatory of Music in 1908 and has taught in Lane College and Lincoln Institute.

Mr. Harry A. Williams is not only an accompanist of unusual ability but also the possessor of a fine tenor voice which brought him the position of soloist in St. Paul’s Episcopal Church, Cleveland, O., for three years before he went abroad to study.

In Paris he was one year with Della Sedie and two years with Shrigl’a, famous for his training of the celebrated Jean de Reske. While in Paris Mr. Williams frequently sang in concerts, and later in London. There as the protegé of Denza, with whom he lived for several years, he taught singing at the Academy of Music, of which Denza and Tosti were two of the directors. On his return from abroad he taught singing in Cleveland, then later in Washington, organizing the Washington Concert Orchestra and taking charge in 1911 of the Vocal Department of the Washington Conservatory. He is now engaged in vocal instruction in New York.

Ford T. Dabney was born in Washington, D. C., in 1883 and received his musical education under Charles Donch, W. Waldecker and S. Fabin of Washington. He was for three years court pianist to the President of Haiti and is the first colored man to lead on orchestra on Broadway in New York. At present Dabney’s Syncopated Orchestra furnishes the music for Ziegfeld’s “Midnight Frolic” on the roof of the New Amsterdam Theatre.

A CHEMIST

St. Elmo Brady was born in Louisville, Ky., and educated at Fisk, where he received his A. B. in 1908. In 1913 he entered the University of Illinois, making a specialty of chemistry. He received his Master’s degree in 1914, was a Fellow from 1914 to 1916 and received his Doctorate in Philosophy this year. He has published three papers in abstract with Dr. C. G. Derrick in Science and also papers in the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry in collaboration. He has read two papers before the American Chemical Society and is a member of the Phi Lambda

ST. ELMO BRADY  LORENZO HARRIS  DR. J. E. DIBBLE
Upsilon, the National Chemical Society and of the Sigma Xi, a national scientific society.

He is at present head of the division of science at Tuskegee Institute.

AN ARTIST

During the Philadelphia pageant the friends of Lorenzo Harris presented a large poster to the Committee-in-Charge. They did this as a token of appreciation for a young man who has fought his way forward under unusual difficulties.

He was born in Richmond, Va., in 1888 and won a scholarship at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia where he studied for three years. During this time he helped to support himself by modeling on the beach at Atlantic City. Mr. Harris had the misfortune to lose an arm in a street car accident but has nevertheless persevered with his work in illustration and cartooning. His cartoons have often appeared in the _Crisis._

A PHYSICIAN

Dr. J. E. Dibble has been a well known physician in Kansas City, Mo., for more than a dozen years.

In a recent examination for an assistant surgeon in the Philippine service, held throughout the United States, Dr. Dibble won first place in the State of Missouri and fifth place for the nation. The examination was not restricted by race or color and was taken by hundreds of physicians.

Dr. Dibble is Chief Medical Inspector of the colored schools in Kansas City.

CASEMENT

Sir Roger Casement deserves the lasting gratitude of the Negro race for having been the first British official to fearlessly expose the merciless atrocities of the Congo and bring about their cessation. Why not take the initiative among millions of grateful Negroes (some even now on battlefields in Europe defending Belgium) and request the British Ambassador to forward urgent plea for exercise of Royal clemency in favor of the benefactor of our race?

FROM SELMA, ALABAMA

My brother was shot twice, one bullet taking effect in his arm and the other in the back of his head, and I think they say that it either came through his forehead, or lodged somewhere in his jaw, as he tried to dodge. He lived only two hours after and could not utter a word after he was hurt. The physicians were not in the least hopeful and told uncle that there was only one chance in a thousand for him to live, but that they would do what they could. He died while they were operating.

The white man who shot him had come from Marion, a place just about thirty miles from Selma. My brother was to deliver a package to him at the station. There is a law here that porters must not go on trains to deliver packages, they must not cross a certain line, but customers when leaving must go to the porters and call for their packages. But this one demanded that my brother should come on the train and hand him his package. My brother told him that he would not do so, as it was against the law. They continued to argue until it was nearly time for the train to go. Then he got off and wanted to get the package and not sign for it. My brother would not do... that. The white man struck him and threw his knife at him twice. When he saw that brother was getting out of the way he began to fire his pistol. My brother had nothing with which to protect himself and was trying to get out of the way. It does seem that someone could have intercepted somehow, but I don’t know. My brother ran as long as he could, or as far, and then fell. They say that it was done in about five minutes.

It was terrible and sad. I had no idea that I would ever have been called home for anything like that, not for this brother anyhow, because he has never meddled or entertained a quarrel, not even when he has had cause to, and was of a most quiet disposition—perhaps too much so.

The man is in jail and has not been out on bond, though there have been many attempts to do so. He had no witnesses at the preliminary trial. Sentiment of both races is against him. There were three eye-witnesses of the other race; two have testified against him and one has not been examined yet. But, of course, in cases like this where one of their race is concerned we do not depend on their sentiment. It is their show down when it comes to meting out justice.

Many of them have expressed their sympathy in the case, but what does that amount to from them when one of their race has murdered my brother for nothing?

FROM BOSTON

I HAVE never subscribed for your paper, though you have been kind enough to send me several copies. I have taken pains to look them through carefully and was intending to write you about their spirit, which to me is extremely undesirable.

The articles seem largely to consist of vituperation against white people for disrespect and harm done to colored people.

If your idea is to stir up antagonism and dislike between the races this may be one way to do it, but it would appear an unfortunate plan on which to conduct what might be an interesting and instructive magazine.

My mother, Mrs. S. Parkman Blake, and I, together with hundreds of other people North and South, have subscribed for years to Hampton, Tuskegee, Calhoun, Penn, Atlanta, Utica and innumerable smaller institutions for the colored people. We take the greatest interest in their fine progress and advancement.

Mr. Washington’s noble spirit and wise judgment permeates us all so much, and we might wish that the Crisis would take a leaf from his book.

(MISS) MARIAN L. BLAKE.

FROM MEXICO

THE first Crisis that I have seen, and that not mine, gives an account of the Eaves lad of Iowa. The matter, coming as it did from the source that it did, was trivial in the extreme, and as a captain of this regiment said: “The boy’s parents should have spanked him and put him to bed.” But I believe that boy’s act was the direct result of parental teaching in regard to the country and flag.

This Eavesism has done us no good as a race, nor has it done the country at large any in this time of need of preparation for its defense. Two wrongs do not make a right. No man’s country that I have seen is all that he wishes, but like every man’s home and parents they may be humble, even mean and without advantage to him whatsoever, still they are his home, his parents—right or wrong, his.

The old toast of the army and navy should be that of every true American today: “Our country may it ever be right, but right or wrong our country.”

If the Eavesists think or find no God in the flag they must remember that one-eighth part of it is theirs and of their own making. Let them by the charity, patience, good will and helpfulness that they expect from the other fellow (the white man) strive to make it right.

The best soldiers of the Tenth Cavalry have bidden me say that they find God in the fold of the flag and delight to salute and protect it. They bid me say again that Eavesism does no good; that it cools our friends and heats our enemies.

CHARLES YOUNG,

FROM A CHRISTIAN

HOW far may we carry the matter of “policy”? I confess I have not been severe in criticizing those in ordinary business who feel called upon to choose their patrons, excluding those who are not so profitable, or who injure the trade, and catering to those who support their business. This man, who is naturally selfish, may argue on the ground of self-preservation; but shall the Christians carry these methods into the church and into the practice of the Christian religion? If so, wherein is the Man of God different from the Man of the World?

Our friends of the Millennium lay great stress on the teachings of Jesus; but does Jesus' record show that he was a slave to "policy"? Was it policy for him to eat with publicans and sinners, or to talk with the base woman at the well? Again, St. Paul was the greatest example of a righteous man the world ever knew. And we know Paul's record. We remember him at Salamis, at Mars Hill, and before Agrippa, and wherever we see him he is no compromiser. And so, I believe, it is an injustice and a reflection on the cause of world Christianity for an organization of Christians to rule that the color line is necessary on the grounds of expediency.

FROM CHICAGO

If I were you I would refuse to admit that there is any Negro problem. I am not aware that there is one. There is a white man problem. It is the problem of how to get the white man to adopt a sane attitude to the colored man. I am not conscious of anything wrong with the Negro beyond the usual faults that afflict the rest of us. Are you? And the root of the white man's insanity is simply a cultivated aversion. In countries where there is no colored population you go about as freely and are as welcome as I am. In London it was in my club I met you. Here I have to be careful to remember that I must never, for my own sake, ask a colored friend to meet me at a club, or indeed scarcely anywhere else. Now that is the whole trouble. The people who know least about colored humanity are those who live where there is a colored population. When white people give me a long list of Negro, or other colored people's vices, I always ask whether they speak from personal knowledge, and they answer with fine scorn that they do not, because they would never under any circumstances admit to coming in contact with them any more than they can help. Thus, although I have never been in India I have been told by Anglo-Indians who have been there for years, that I know more of the natives than they do, because I mixed with them in London and had them living with me. Now if we can only persuade plain men like myself to sit in a club and drink tea with colored people they will soon learn that there is a great deal of human nature about each other, and that color is only skin deep. So I thought of starting a club in London where people of all races might meet. The colored men to whom this would mostly have applied would have been East Indians, because they are, I think, by far the largest colored community there. There were difficulties in the way, however, and the outbreak of the war killed it.

Now here, of course, I am new, and I don't feel in the way to start anything, but I have always felt it my duty to do all I could personally to bridge over the social barrier between the races. On Sunday I joined the Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but it does not seem to me to form much means for social intercourse, and that I consider the great need. Perhaps you yourself may not quite realize the difficulty of the position of a man like myself. If I am not discreet I may easily get into difficulties with the whites among whom I have to live without doing any good either to the Negroes or anyone else, and anyhow, I am apt to be misunderstood by both parties. It has sometimes happened that an Indian has thought I must have had some ulterior motive for showing an interest in him and I fear in the case of many white men his suspicions would have been well founded. I expect it will be the same with Negroes. I used to ask how could men live all their lives in a country with an alien race and yet know so little of them. Now I am asking myself how can I help. I shall soon have been here a year, yet I have made not a single Negro acquaintance. The only Negroes I meet are the men who black my shoes, transport my luggage, or serve me in some of the restaurants. There is no common meeting ground for us. I never see a Negro face in any society or club where I go, except it be that of a man in a menial capacity. I have talked to these men and been interested in some of them, but if I ask anybody where I can find educated and cultured Negroes I am generally told there aren't any. And if I take the bull by the horns and go to any Negro institution of any kind I fear that my action will not be understood by either Negroes or whites.
MILITARY

MR. BAKER, the new Secretary of War, has signalized his loyalty to Mr. Wilson by forbidding any enlistment of colored and white militiamen in the same regiment. Even colored cooks have been ordered discharged from the Pennsylvania regiments.

Charles Young, ranking colored officer on the active list in the United States Army, passed his examination successfully June 28 and was made Lieutenant-Colonel, July 1, 1916. He is serving under General Pershing "somewhere in Mexico." An interesting letter from Colonel Young appears on page 192.

The following bodies of colored militia were mobilized in the late Mexican scare: The Eighth Illinois Regiment, under Colonel Dennison; the First Separate Battalion of the District of Columbia under Major J. E. Walker; and the Ninth Ohio Colored Battalion.

Movements toward organizing Negro militia have been made in New York State, where one company has been mustered in under First Lieutenant V. W. Tandy; in Philadelphia, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Nebraska. Volunteer companies have been planned in Alabama and Tennessee.

The survivors of the fight at Carrizal, Mexico, were met at the National Bridge, El Paso, Tex., with bouquets of flowers and clothing. The bodies of their dead fellows were buried with military honors, each casket being draped with an American flag and their riderless horses walking behind. White and colored cavalrymen accompanied the bodies.

Mrs. A. B. Thoms, of the Lincoln Hospital in New York, is calling for seventy-five colored nurses to enroll under the Red Cross. They must be between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five and be graduates of a registered training school. Volunteer hospital assistants, who are not trained nurses, are also wanted.

EDUCATION

THE poorest school systems in the United States, measured by expenditure of funds, are Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia—in other words, the South.

There were enrolled in school last year 1,670,650 colored boys and girls.

Gainesville, Fla., had in 1910, 6,183 inhabitants, of whom about half were colored people. Just after the war Northern white people gave the colored people a block of land for school purposes and for a while helped them. Then the land was turned over to the colored people on the theory that the State would provide a school. For many years the State has provided a five months' school for colored people and an eight months' school for white people, paying the colored principal forty-five dollars a month and his assistants thirty dollars a month. The white principal gets one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month and his assistants sixty dollars and up. Recently a rich townsman, Mr. Thornton Springfellow, who owns land near the colored plot, decided that it would make his property more salable if the city acquired the colored property and moved the school further out toward the country. The colored trustees refused to assent to this, whereupon the County Superintendent, Dr. Kelly, abolished the colored school. As a consequence the colored people have had no public school during the year 1916.

FOREIGN

The Free Lance, of Georgetown, British Guiana, reminds us of the terrible labor conditions out of which colored laborers the world over are slowly emerging:

"Now that the laborers in Water street are becoming somewhat restless and are talking about striking, we deem this an opportune moment to sound a friendly note of warning to the government, and those whom it may concern. To us it seems a crime that a man should labor for 18 hours a day at the small and sweating wage of $2.88 per week. And yet, we have been informed that this is the average wage of the laborer in Water street."

THE CRISIS

70 Fifth Avenue New York
To Crisis Readers:

You have read the story of the "Waco Horror" in the supplement to the July Crisis.

Moorfield Storey, our national president, formerly president of the American Bar Association, and Mr. Philip G. Peabody, another distinguished Boston lawyer, have each offered to give $1000 toward an anti-lynching fund of $10,000 on condition that the other $8000 be raised by August 1.

The time has come, they believe, to organize such influential southern opinion as is right on this question, and help them fight every lynching that occurs by legal action, by publicity, and by political agitation, as we are fighting this one. Our Board of Directors has discussed every detail. We believe there is enough sentiment with us in the South to justify such an expenditure. Our plans are fully formulated. President Storey's action speaks for his faith in their practicality.

Are you with us? If so, what will you give?

Your aid must be received during July to make the two $1000 pledges available. Is it worth any sacrifice to you?

J. E. SPINGARN, Chairman of the Board of Directors.

A New Book by Dr. Du Bois

THE NEGRO

By W. E. BURGHARDT DU BOIS, author of "Souls of Black Folk," "Quest of the Silver Fleece," "Select Bibliography of the Negro American," etc.

This is the authentic romance of the black man. It is a history of him at once scholarly, earnest and eloquent. He is considered from the earliest times, and the thread of his fascinating story is followed in Africa, America, and wherever else it has appeared. To look at the Negro against the background of his history is to see him in a light fairer than that in which most Americans have seen him.

The CRISIS, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York

Mention The Crisis
SAMUEL COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, the first composer of classic music to come from the colored races, was born in London forty years ago. His genius asserted itself at the early age of six when, as one of his admirers describes it, he was found “holding a very small-sized violin in one hand, and playing at marbles with the other.” The real discovery was, however, made by his guardian, friend, and benefactor, Colonel Herbert, of the Queen’s Regiment. At thirteen, he was a brilliant solo violinist. Entering the Royal College of Music in 1890, three years later, he won an open scholarship for composition. His progress was marked by such landmarks as “Hiawatha’s Wedding Feast,” known the world over, “Herod,” “Ulysses,” “Nero,” “Faust,” “Endymion’s Dream,” “A Tale of Old Japan,” “Othello.”

The tribute we pay to the darker races of the world who have produced artists, thinkers, and composers is notorious by its absence. Proud of his race, it was indeed characteristic of the sturdy, honest nature of Coleridge-Taylor that he never sought to keep in the background his Negro origin, but, on the contrary, was thoroughly proud of it and of his own position. Of the fascination the tale of his life holds for a biographer, it is needless to speak. Mr. Berwick Sayers has brought to his loving task an enthusiasm which makes of his volume charming reading.

Alfred Noyes, in the poem entitled “Samuel Coleridge-Taylor,” writes:

The spark that falls from heaven, not oft on earth,
To human hearts its vital splendor gives;
His was the simple, true, immortal birth
Scholars compose; but

THIS MAN’S MUSIC LIVES.

The Journal of Negro History
Published Quarterly Edited by CARTER G. WOODSON

THE JOURNAL OF NEGRO HISTORY is the official organ of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, which is now trying not to promote an isolated research into the history of the black race but to show how civilization has been influenced by contact with the people of color. This publication aims to popularize the movement to save and make available the scattered historical materials bearing on the Negro. In it appear scholarly articles and valuable documents giving information generally unknown. It is concerned with facts not with opinions.

Subscription price, $1.00 per year. Foreign subscriptions, 25 cents extra.
Single numbers, 25 cents; 30 cents by mail.

Checks should be made payable to THE JOURNAL OF NEGRO HISTORY and addressed to CARTER G. WOODSON, 2223 12th St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
