

government appointees and U.S. foreign-policy professionals. In fact, a number of our contributors occupy key positions in the current administration. We influence real-world decisions affecting your future. That's why I want you to see our current issue -- FREE.

Simply return the enclosed order card in the postage-paid envelope provided. We'll enter your subscription and send you your first issue -- FREE. Around the same time, you'll receive a bill for $18 covering four more quarterly issues (one year's worth). That's five issues in all! You'll save 34% off the newsstand price! But you needn't decide to pay our bill until you've had the chance to delve into The National Interest.

That's because reading us is the only way to appreciate our seriousness of purpose. Committed to both in-depth analysis and lively controversy, we bring you today's best foreign-policy writing.

After you've had the chance to examine your FREE issue, you face a simple choice:

1. Pay the $18 and receive the remaining four issues.
-- OR --
2. Write "CANCEL" on the invoice, send it back, keep your FREE issue, pay nothing -- and owe nothing!

A straightforward offer? We think so.

Remember, four times a year our authoritative commentators address fascinating foreign-policy questions crucial to you and your future. For example:

- Does a "Democratic Crusade" make sense?
- Now that the Cold War is over, should America "come home"?
- Does Japan succeed by fair means or foul?
- Is economic power replacing military power?
- Was the Gulf War just?
- Are we moving toward a protectionist world?
- Does "New World Order" mean anything?

We honestly know of no other publication that provides such a complete and intelligent framework for understanding modern America's position in complex world affairs.

So please take a moment right now while everything is at hand, to get your FREE copy of The National Interest -- the journal where the great debates begin!

Sincerely,

Owen Harries
Owen Harries
Editor

P.S. If you do subscribe and decide at any time in the future that you no longer want to receive The National Interest, don't worry: We'll send you a refund for all unmailed issues -- guaranteed!