

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute ESSAY SERIES

Some Writings on War Tax Resistance

Historically in the United States, individuals have withheld their federal taxes to protest their government's militarism. They have engaged in this civil disobedience both as an act of individual conscience and as part of an organized resistance movement. In this pamphlet, Allen Ginsberg, Pete Seeger, and other peace activists offer some information about war tax resistance, and its political and personal consequences; and share their reasons for resisting.

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute

The A.J. Muste Memorial Institute is a non-profit tax exempt organization. It was founded in 1974 to further the goals of its namesake: to explore and teach how nonviolence can be used to bring about world peace, and social and economic justice.

Through grants, sponsorships, the publication of social change resources, and the development of independent educational programs, the Institute has supported more than fifty projects and has helped people bring the message of peace virtually all over the world.

The Institute is pleased to offer this pamphlet as part of a series comprised of important classical and contemporary pacifist writings. Please write for a list of the other titles available.

339 Lafayette St.
New York, N.Y. 10012
(212) 533-4335

PRICE $1 Discounts available on bulk orders.

Printed on recycled paper

