

scholarship of even a few hundred dollars. And when they discover that someone like you believes in them and cares for them, they redouble their own ambition to receive an education.

May I hear from you?

It is the belief of the Lummi Tribe of the Northwestern United States that a person's wealth is measured by what he gives away, not by what he keeps.

And so your gift will be recognized as a generous act on your part and will be repaid many times over in the life of a Native American student.

$35	--	can help provide basic school supplies
$50	--	can purchase books for a tribal college
$100	--	can purchase modern lab equipment
$500	--	can upgrade computer terminals
$1,975	--	can fully pay annual tuition for one student
$7,900	--	can provide a four-year education

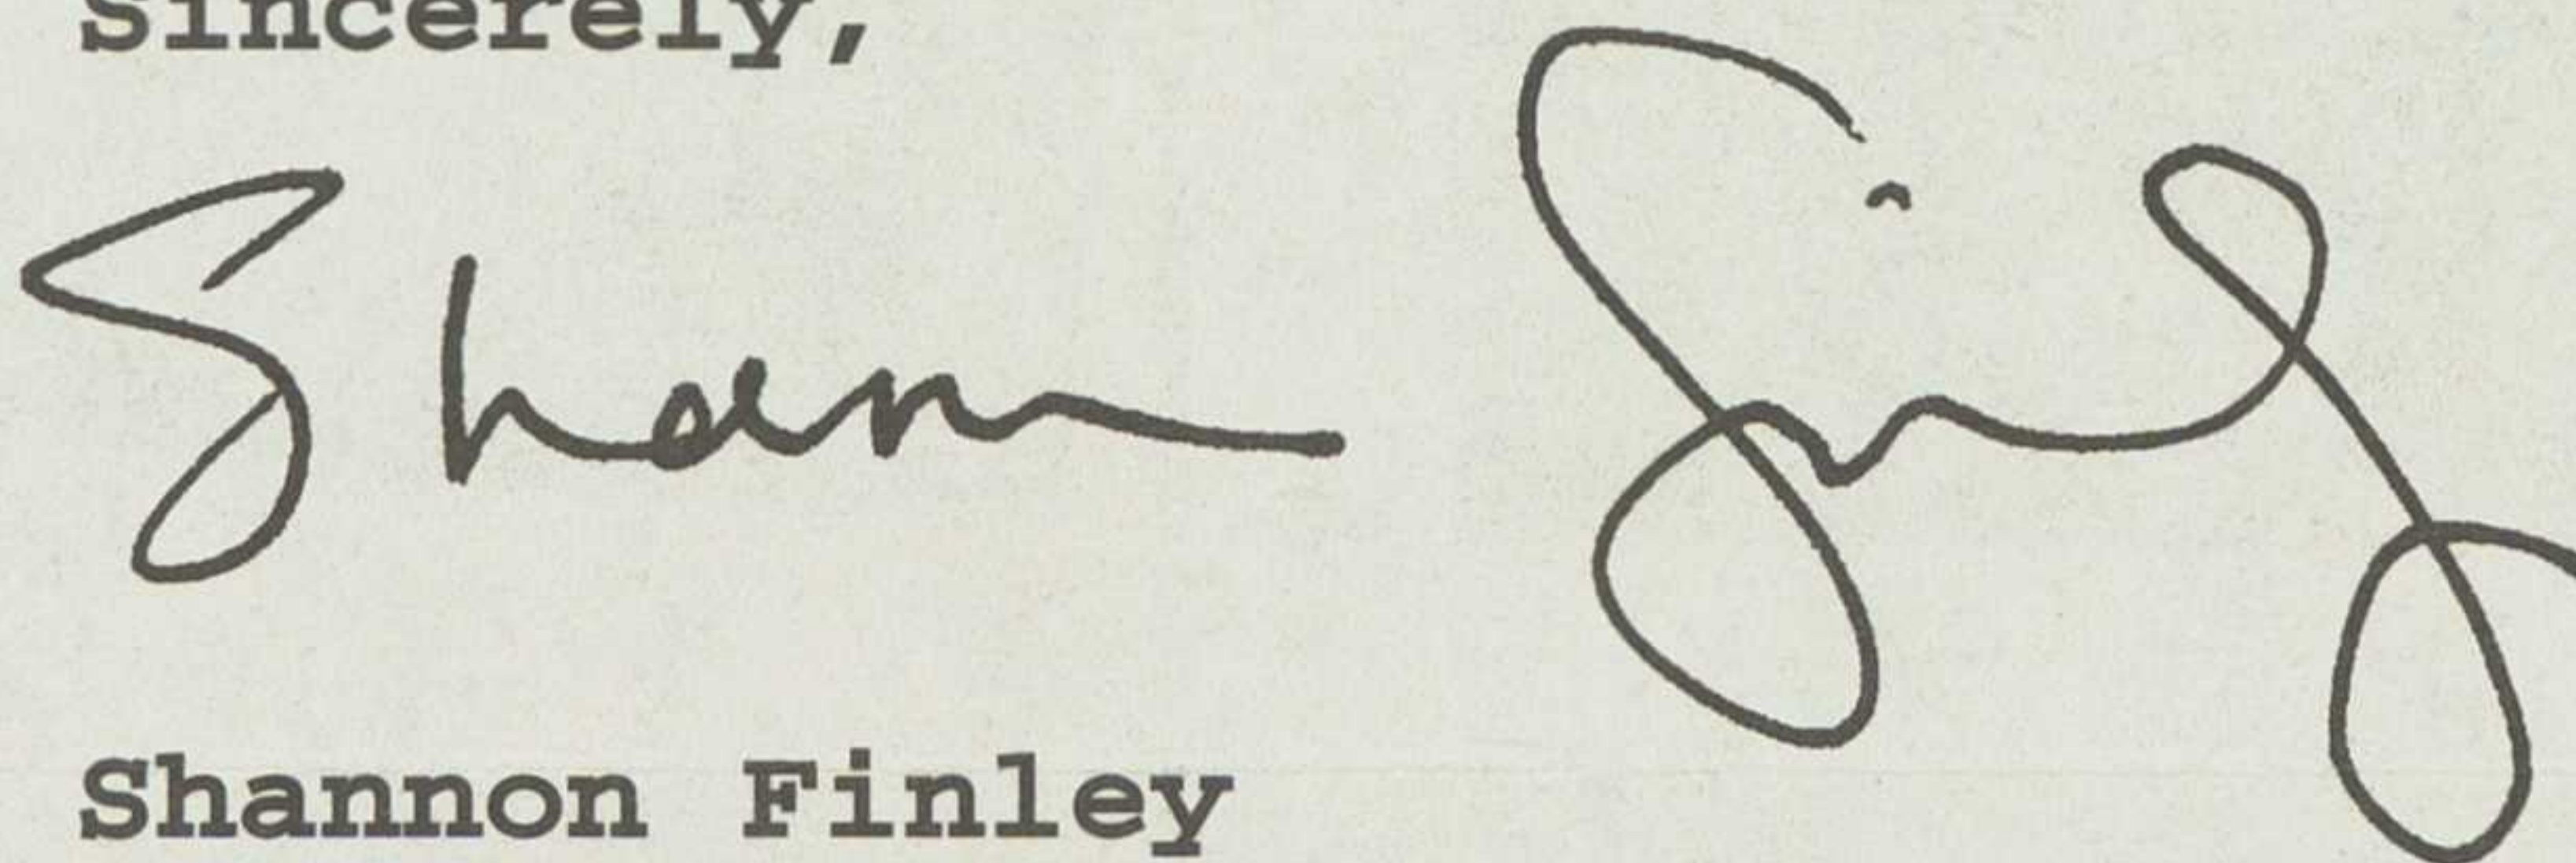

Your gift will qualify you as one of our Honorary Alumni. For $50 you'll receive the most recent issue of Tribal College Journal.

For a gift of $100 or more, you'll receive a limited edition poster of Chief Sitting Bull. (See next page for details.)

For your convenience in contributing to the American Indian College Fund, I've enclosed a reply form and reply envelope.

We need your friendship!

Sincerely,

Shannon Finley
Eastern Shoshone/Ysleta Del Sur Pueblo,
Executive Director,
American Indian College Fund

P.S. Thank you for reading this letter and for understanding that it's going to take more than just empty promises to give Native American young people their fair opportunity for an education.