

ALL MIGHTY • A Study of The God Complex in Western Man

by Horst E. Richter

This 9¼" x 6¼" hardback book is a four-part psychological study of the egotistical illusion of man's omnipotence.

Part One — "The God Complex: A History of The Myth of Man's Omnipotence" — explains that at about the end of the Middle Ages man lost the sense of himself as the protected child of god. Then an authoritarian compulsion evolved in man to assume the omnipotence of his dethroned god.

Part Two — "The Sickness of Being Unable to Suffer" — shows how man's need to be omnipotent was actually a retreat from the intimidating feelings of weakness, insignificance, self-doubt, and the fear of death. The male therefore attempted to become the embodiment of strength while relegating weakness to women, minorities, and children.

Part Three — "The Task Ahead: Overcoming The Psychical and Social Split Within Man" — explores the human's inner capacity to heal society through sympathetic identification with the joys and sorrows of others.

Part Four — "Case History: An Object Lesson in Overcoming The Myth of Omnipotence" — is a study which attempts to reveal the personal and prototype dimensions of the God Complex.

The overall work is a thought-provoking explanation of man's need to become god — the convoluted illusion of primitive human imagination.
