

The march in Boston on December 14, 1974, marked a turning point in the struggle against racism there. When 25,000 people, many of them white, turned out to say no to racism the racist mobilization was thwarted and the struggle against the racists gathered new strength.