

The NAACP rally by Sam Marcy was first published in Workers World, Vol. 17, No. 22, May 30, 1975, under the title: Self-determination and assimilationism—On boycotting the NAACP rally.

A year of measurable gain by Deirdre Griswold was first published in Workers World, Vol. 17, No. 39, Oct. 10, 1975, under the title: Boston and the anti-racist struggle—A year of measurable gain.

World View Publishers
46 West 21 Street
New York, N.Y. 10010

December 1975
Labor Donated

THE NAACP RALLY

NEW YORK, May 23—On May 17, the NAACP, in conjunction with other organizations, organized a huge rally in Boston to mark the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court decision which was supposed to ban segregation in the public schools. The rally was to protest the failure to implement the court's decision.

There has been a steady stream of reversals of this decision engendered by the high-pitched campaign against busing which has made Boston a symbol of racist hysteria. Indeed, the ruling class succeeded by the use of the anti-busing slogan to transform the school desegregation issue from a political question into a transportation problem.

There have been all too few significant rallies protesting racism arising from the busing issue. Even this rally probably would not have taken place had it not been for the initiative taken by Youth Against War & Fascism, along with other organizations, in organizing the march of last December 14 which mobilized about 25,000 people, giving a tremendous impetus to