Welfare mothers have one of the toughest jobs there is: trying to feed, clothe, and house their kids on as little as $120 a month (Mississippi allotment for a family of four).

Who needs welfare? Millions of women, children and men too as unemployment deepens. But this assistance, already inadequate, has been cut back while tax breaks and other forms of welfare for the rich have increased. Elizabeth Ross explains to workers why they should fight for a better welfare system in this lively book.
