

second opinion. And whether it's okay to tape-record conversations with your doctor.

The bias runs deep. WOMEN'S HEALTH ADVOCATE levels the playing field.

Women are routinely subjected to medical treatments based on research studies conducted only on men.

Will an aspirin a day reduce our risk of stroke and heart attack as it does in men? We think so, but we're not completely sure. A large study to test this hypothesis is underway.

In 1990, the National Institutes of Health devoted a mere 13% of its $5.7 billion budget to the health issues of the female half of the population.

Only now are the inequities beginning to be addressed.

Each fast-reading, monthly, 8-page issue of WOMEN'S HEALTH ADVOCATE will give you direct access to the newest research studies, clinical findings and changing health policies as they affect women.

We explode myths. Shed light on how your body works, and what it needs to stay well. Bring you the follow-up on news that made headlines, never to be heard again. Provide a forum for women in medicine to speak out on important issues.

And we do it in a simple, straightforward style that not only respects your intelligence, but also your busy life.

Fiercely independent. Free to report on both sides of the issues.

Most other health publications are written for men and women, so half the advice you get may be irrelevant. Or worse yet, dangerous. WOMEN'S HEALTH ADVOCATE is for women only.

As an independent voice on wellness, WOMEN'S HEALTH ADVOCATE answers only to you.

We're not affiliated with any institution, so we're free to report on whatever breakthroughs are being made. And we're willing to explore controversies that others consider too hot to handle.

Our Editorial Board is comprised of nationally prominent physicians representing a wide range of medical specialties. All share our dedication to making you a better health care consumer.
