

"We Alone"

In these days of uncertainty, of apprehension, of drift, men and women need the assurance of a reasoned faith. They need to believe in themselves. Their minds seek guideposts to a future when peace and security will be possible.

At such a time as this religious sects compete for attention each one proclaiming: "Ours is THE way to salvation! We ALONE have it!" There are, of course, many such sects, but we often hear them classified as "the three faiths," meaning Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish.

The Fourth Faith

It is seldom mentioned, however, that there is in the Western World a "fourth faith" embraced by vast numbers, a faith called Humanism. This fourth faith (with such rare exceptions as the Humanistisch Verbond of Holland; the Ethical Societies of England, America, and Austria; and certain Unitarian and Universalist churches in the United States) has no church to embody it. But it is a widespread movement, a movement of increasing importance.

Living and Believing

Most Humanists do not know they are Humanists. They may even give lip-service to another faith; but they live and really believe as Humanists.

Humanism is a point-of-view found here and there among the
