
For too many decades, Christians, conservatives, and Constitutionalists have

Those of us who failed to responsibly exercise our duties of stewardship in the political arena.

have failed to hold accountable the officials of civil government. We have permitted our civil government at the Federal level to break the bonds of accountability to us.

We have permitted a civil service bureaucracy to grow up which too often serves itself and not the citizens and taxpayers from whom it derives its authority.

Congress has unconstitutionally permitted that Federal bureaucracy to not merely implement decisions crafted by public officials electorally accountable to the American people, but to make policy on its own.

Congress has also authorized the establishment of a vast array of regulatory agencies whose very existence contradicts the requirement of Article I, Section 1 of the Constitution that "all legislative powers" shall be exercised by Congress.

In like manner, Congress has consigned, over the past three decades, many hundreds of billions of dollars of your hard-earned taxes to the control of private groups — accountable only to themselves — which have used the resources placed at their disposal to change American civilization to conform to their private predilections, using the courts, the streets, the culture, and the corridors of power to render the very process of elections, by means of which we are to exercise our stewardship, increasingly irrelevant in shaping the course of public policy.

Congress has, moreover, failed to exercise its role as guardian of the Constitution.

Presidents of the United States seek to transgress the confines of their legitimate authority. Presidential executive orders, which purport to make law, are unconstitutional from start to finish. The Constitution makes the President our Chief Executive, not our Chief Legislator.

And the President's role as commander-in-chief extends only insofar as he provides leadership in defense of the United States of America.

Congress was derelict in its duty in failing to oppose President Clinton's unconstitutional Bosnian intervention.

And Congress, which has the principal responsibility "to make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces", has been delinquent in its failure to protect courageous American soldiers — such as Michael New — from being forced to replace their American I.D. cards with U.N. cards, and in failing to protect American military personnel from visibly transferring their allegiance from the Stars and Stripes,
