

Is Internet filtering a form of censorship? Can homosexuals change? Why not legalize marijuana? What's so special about marriage? Who does abortion hurt?

Questions like these are common in America's cultural dialogue. Although Christian young people know that the Bible contains answers to all questions, they may find it difficult to explain and apply those principles in the middle of a heated debate over a controversial topic. Every month, FRC produces and distributes free i.e. [ideas & energy] to inform and equip teens. i.e. encourages teens to consider how their personal beliefs apply to social and political issues. It offers information that will equip students to solidify their values and defend them in the public square. Our writers explain some of the fundamental philosophies underlying the hottest debates, and provide modern-day facts and examples.

To ensure that i.e. goes directly to teens, please write in their exact names and addresses on the back side of this card. If your teens already receive i.e., you may also use this card to make a correction in the name or address to which it is sent. feel free to add an extra sheet of paper with additional names.

Also for teens, a new book hot off the presses: If God Wants Me To Wait, Why Do I Have Hormones NOW? Author Emily Chase encourages teens to wait on sex until a lifelong commitment is made:

"Think about it. Sex itself is not something bad or dirty. Sex creates an awesome intimacy. But if people ignore how sex works, the way God designed it, they hurt and miss out on the true pleasure of sex in marriage. This book is to help you enjoy sex to its fullest, within marriage, and, if you should happen not to marry, these pages will introduce you to a God who can fulfill every desire for true intimacy."

As another form of encouragement in virtue, FRC has produced five attractive posters (24"x18"), which encourage a "virtuous reality;" "tough love" (i.e., holding out for marriage); true sexual freedom – staying pure and enjoying marriage; and a "clean slate" – "it's never too late to wait."

To order any of these items, please fill out the reverse side of this card and return it in the enclosed postage-paid envelope.
