

The once-dying village of Guinope, Honduras, is now thriving. Why? The answer to that question holds the promise of ending hunger, not only for the villagers of Guinope, but for millions around the world. And because the answer includes a way to end slash-and-burn agriculture, it also holds great promise for saving much of the world's endangered forest cover.

Recommended for WORLD FOOD DAY or other programs focusing on world hunger, the environment or Central America.
