

THE LIVING WILDERNESS, our beautifully-illustrated quarterly magazine, written not for specialists in resource management, but for people like you.

The Wilderness Report, a hard-hitting and timely commentary on current environmental issues, published as developments dictate.

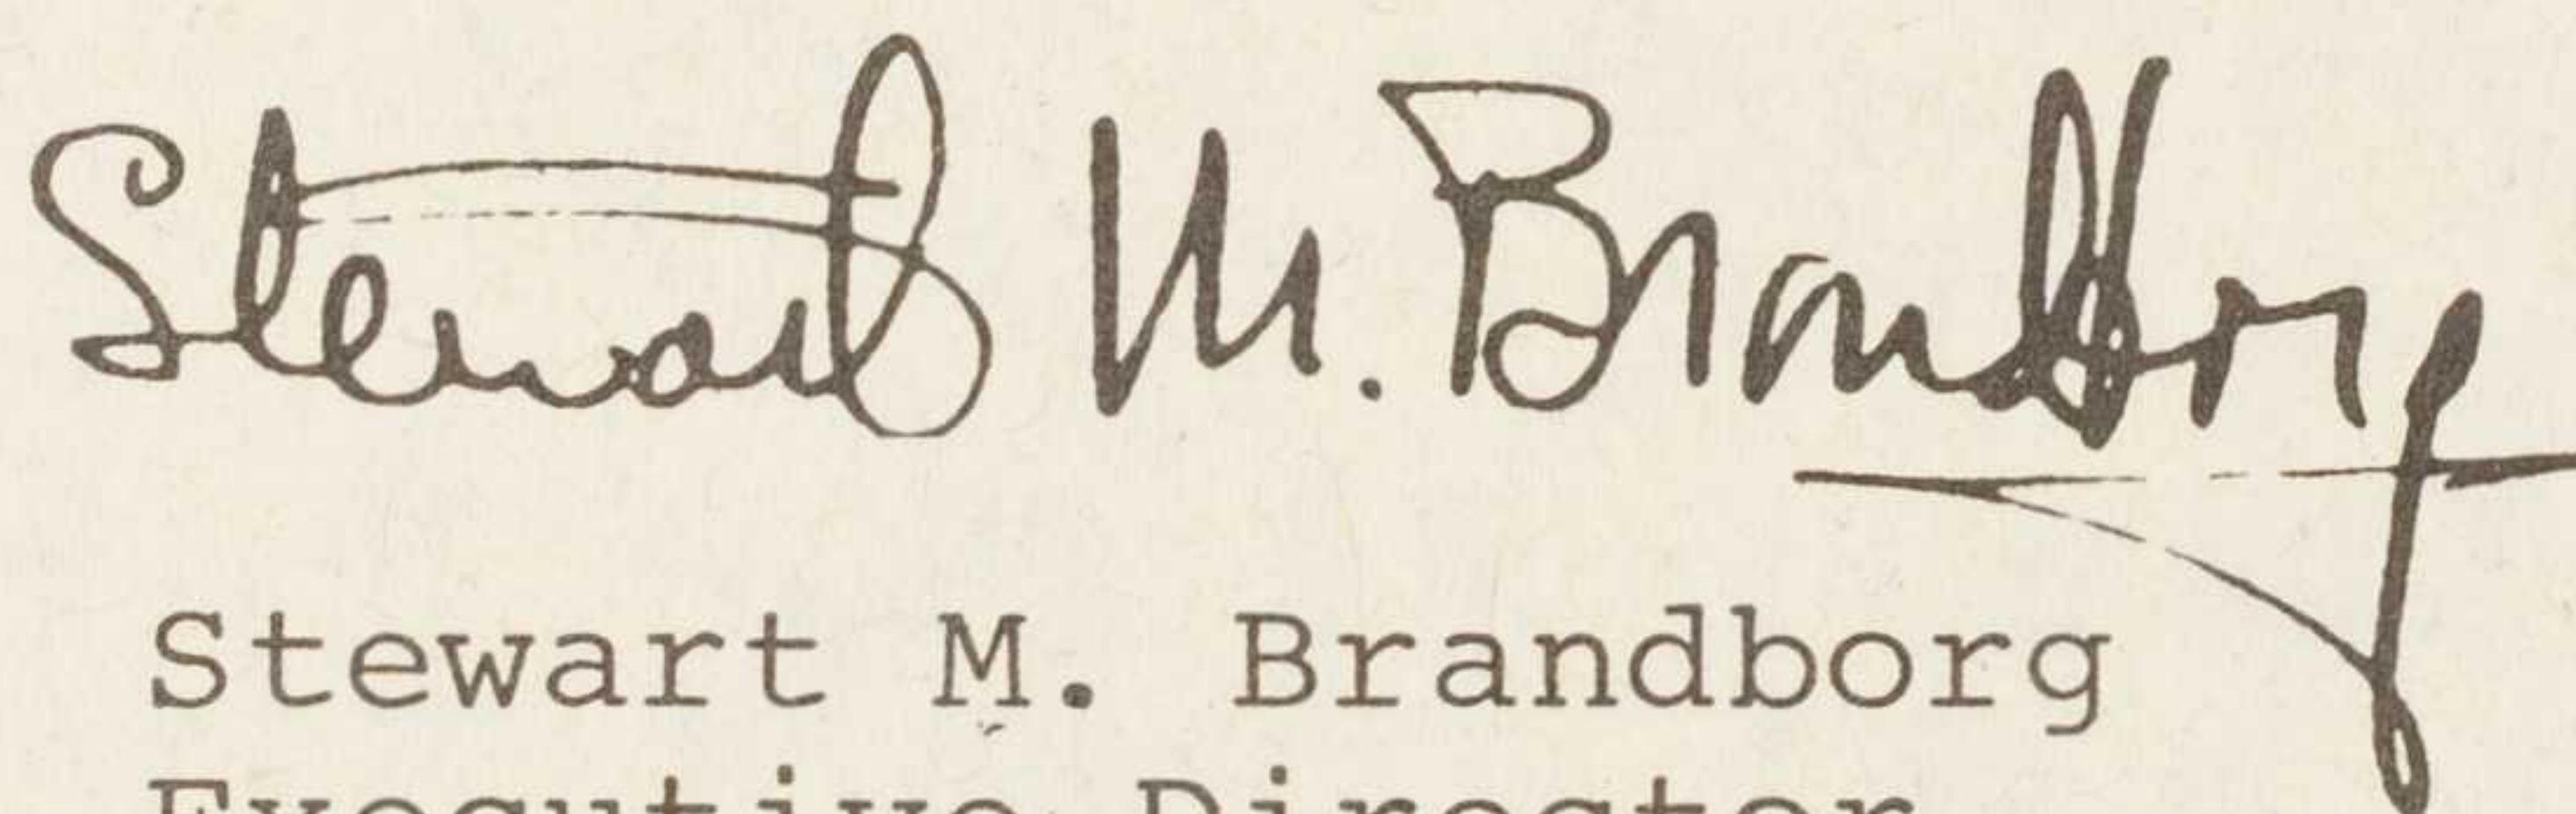

Special reports, issued several times a year, on wilderness and other environmental issues deserving your attention.

What's more, you will be a part of what one top-level official has described as the most effective environmental organization in Washington. The enclosed brochure will give you a brief look at some of the accomplishments of The Wilderness Society.

Now, if you can't join, there is still something you can do - today! And that is to send in a dollar or more for the enclosed sheet of American Wilderness stamps. Your contribution and use of these stamps can be your way of showing your commitment to the preservation of scenes like these in the American wilderness. (In any case, don't return the stamps; put them to use.)

Saving wilderness, saving our environment - these are not just the concerns of this generation, but of generations to come. Someday, perhaps, your grandchildren will ask what you did to help preserve the last vestiges of our great American wilderness. And you will be able to say, "I supported the work of The Wilderness Society; that's what I did." And I hope you will.

Sincerely,

Stewart M. Brandborg
Executive Director

P.S. Memberships in The Wilderness Society make wonderful, lasting gifts for friends and young people. For these, use the enclosed gift order form.