

The newest member of our staff, Rae Sikora, put it very succinctly in a recent article printed in The AV Magazine. She asked why is education important when there are so many direct actions of cruelty against all living creatures today? Yes, closing a lab is very important; rescuing animals from a life spent "entertaining" humans is equally important; all actions which make life better for our fellow earthly inhabitants are important.

But The AAVS believes that it is equally important to teach the difference between what is morally and ethically correct and what is not correct, beginning with childhood. Establish a moral code that covers our relationship with animals, present it to the youth of today and hopefully in the morals and ethics of future generations there will be no room for the use/abuse of animals.

EDUCATE - Help us continue our efforts to educate the youth of today, to hold our workshops and never, due to a lack of funds, have to turn down requests for speakers or information. THROUGH EDUCATION TODAY, WE CAN MAKE A BETTER WORLD FOR OURSELVES AND THE ANIMALS TOMORROW!
