

...you understand even more why nuclear war must be prevented. In compelling human terms, the critically acclaimed film THREADS conveys the urgent message of Physicians for Social Responsibility: there is no cure for nuclear war, only prevention.

Set in the near future, THREADS follows for 13 years the lives of those few who survive the initial blast, heat and radiation of a nuclear war between the superpowers. The terrible reality of a nuclear winter is seen returning society to the Dark Ages. Not only do millions die, civilization crumbles.

Consistently, PSR has challenged the belief that nuclear war can be survived in any medically or socially meaningful way. THREADS provides the dramatic medium through which this false assumption becomes exposed.

The story of THREADS is grim, but the future it portrays is not inevitable. Physicians for Social Responsibility is dedicated to reversing the arms race and reducing the risk of nuclear war.
