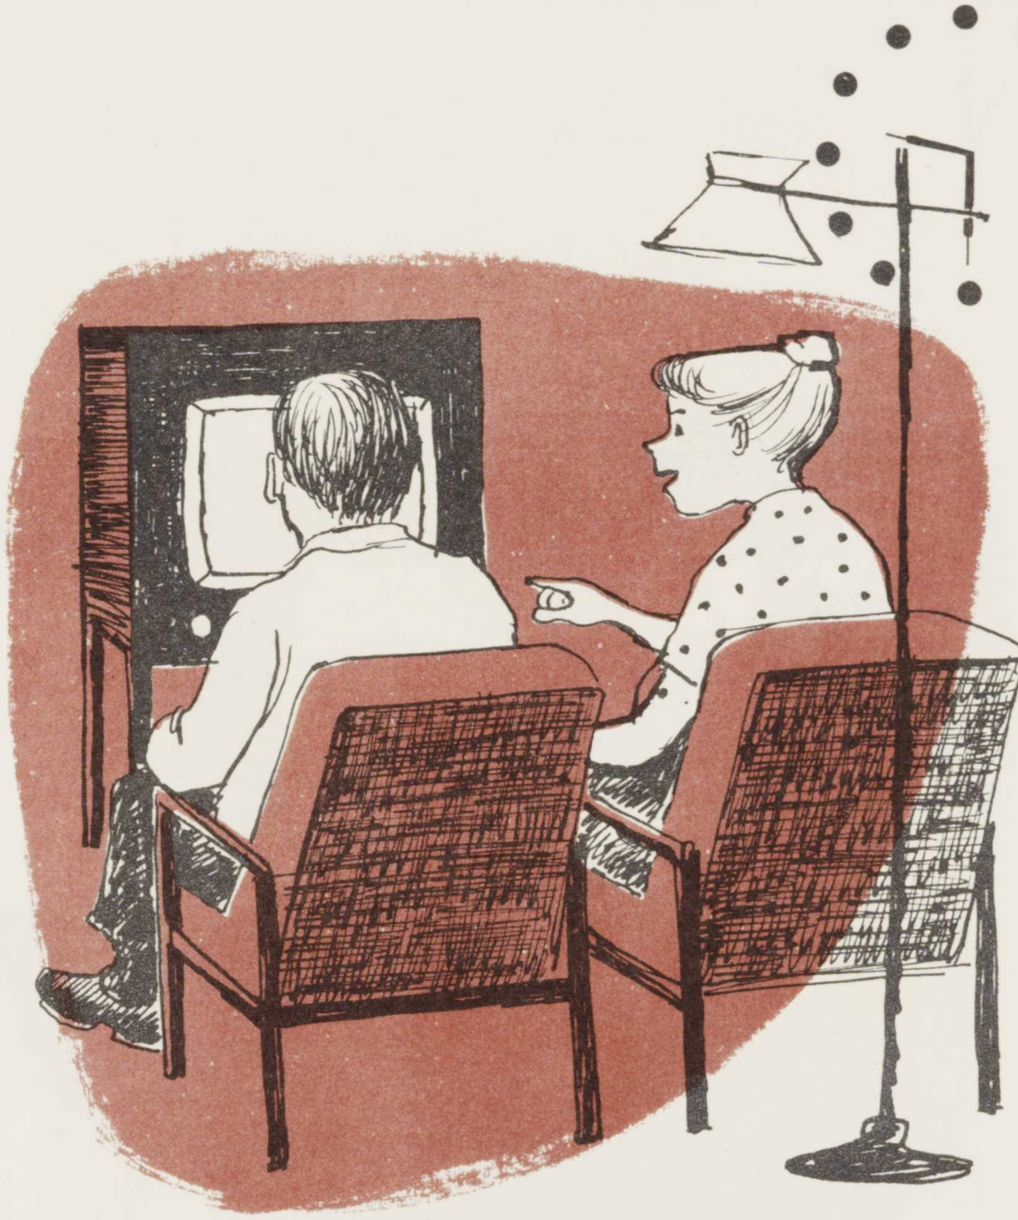
Jerry hurt his back at the plant today. He'll be laid up for several weeks the doctor says. Susie says they'll have to make do on workmen's compensation . . . something the government makes the plant do to protect people when they get hurt. Trouble is, Susie says, the company will claim it was Jerry's fault and they won't get anything to live on until it's all straightened out in the courts or something. If those politicians only knew what the problems of a workingman are they wouldn't be so uppity. THEY'll never get hurt lifting a fountain pen, I can tell you.



Really, why do they have these awful television shows? I've seen that movie at least 10 times. All they want to do is sell something. Don't television stations have to have licenses or something from the government? Well, then why doesn't somebody do something about it?
