

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute ESSAY SERIES

SIDNEY LENS

Sidney Lens (1912–1986) was a peace, social justice, and labor organizer for over five decades, and helped to found several key national antiwar coalitions and the Chicago Peace Council. A prolific writer, he was the author of twenty-two books and countless articles, and served as contributing editor to a variety of progressive publications. A member of the Socialist and Citizens Parties, he ran for several state and national offices, helped organize Voters for Peace, and was chair of the Illinois Impeach Nixon Committee. He also taught and lectured at several colleges.

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute

The A.J. Muste Memorial Institute is a non-profit tax exempt organization. It was founded in 1974 to further the goals of its namesake: to explore and teach how nonviolence can be used to bring about world peace, and social and economic justice.

Through grants, sponsorships, the publication of social change resources, and the development of independent educational programs, the Institute has supported more than fifty projects and has helped people bring the message of peace virtually all over the world.

The Institute is pleased to offer this pamphlet as part of a series comprised of important classical and contemporary pacifist writings. Please write for a list of the other titles available.
