

Introduction

This meeting of the Central Committee of the 4th Congress of the Communist Labor Party marks a very serious moment in the life of our Party. Our environment, the social activity of the class, is undergoing a qualitative change. It is crossing over from passivity to struggle. This forces our Party to transform into a new quality.

To accomplish this transformation, we have to be clear in our theory, line, and policy. We need the creative ability to apply this knowledge and the discipline to carry it out. Faced with a deteriorating economic situation and its concomitant rising reaction, we must build a Party of revolutionaries tied together by ideology and democratic centralism.