Bob Hohler is the new executive of the continental men's organization. He assumed his post in July of this year. Before that he served the denomination as information officer for three years. He was responsible for news and press relations, radio television and film-making. Active in political and civic affairs, Bob also serves the Beacon Hill Chapter as Program Chairman.

Bob describes the subject of his talk in this way: "We live in a new kind of world where the standards and values of another time are no longer relevant. We live in a world where there is no easy measure of right and wrong, good and evil. The ambiguity of our time reflects itself in confusion and anxiety. We are no longer certain even of what it means to be a man."

And remember: Interested women are cordially invited to attend.
