

Charles Krauthammer on the Last Superpower!

Jeane Kirkpatrick on Being a Normal Country Again!

Samuel Huntington on Religion and the Triumph of Democracy!

Fred Barnes on the Gulf War
Scorecard!

Robert Bork on the Fiction of International Law!

Karel van Wolferen on Japan, a Juggernaut With No Brakes!

As you can see, we haven't lapsed into complacent smugness since electrifying the intellectual world with Francis Fukuyama's "The End of History?"!

Would you like a FREE copy of The National Interest? If so, please read on.

Dear Reader,

We would like to send you a FREE copy of the magazine that has been hailed as one of the most influential foreign-policy journals of our time.

Time magazine calls our debates "intellectual combat of a high order." London's Sunday Telegraph notes ruefully, "Nothing as good exists here."

MediaGuide calls us a "splendid" and "remarkable" journal, one that has "raised the level of debate" and "continues to define the issues and set the pace."

The Washington Post says we've been "brilliant and outrageously provocative." According to the New York Times, we're "engagingly bold." And the Library Journal says we've "skyrocketed to the top," adding that our "wit and sophistication are as much the key as valuable, original opinion."

The National Interest is the one journal that asks -- and answers -- the most pressing foreign-policy questions facing our nation today. Our approach is tough-minded and clear-headed but strong on the "vision thing." We publish the boldest attempts anywhere to predict the character of the new post-Cold War era.

Our quarterly is already a major resource for high-level

(over please)