

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute ESSAY SERIES

BARBARA DEMING

Barbara Deming (born 1917) has been active in the nonviolent movement for peace and social justice since the early 1960s, and has been arrested numerous times for civil disobedience. She is the author of five books and countless articles, and is now writing a sixth book. Barbara Deming's current primary commitment is to the feminist community and its efforts to end patriarchal domination of society.

A. J. Muste Memorial Institute

The A.J. Muste Memorial Institute is a non-profit tax exempt organization. It was founded in 1974 to further the goals of its namesake: to explore and teach how nonviolence can be used to bring about world peace, and social and economic justice.

Through grants, sponsorships, the publication of social change resources, and the development of independent educational programs, the Institute has supported more than fifty projects and has helped people bring the message of peace virtually all over the world.

The Institute is pleased to offer this pamphlet as part of a series comprised of important classical and contemporary pacifist writings. Please write for a list of the other titles available.
