

The Bible calls them the “fatherless.” Because they have no father-protector. Though he may be living, the father cannot—or will not—come to the aid of his child.

Weak and vulnerable, they are easy prey for violence and abuse. They have no way to fight back. Someone must stand up for them.

At 12 weeks, the unborn child is 3 inches long. He can suck his thumb and he recoils from pain.

The world cares for other needy children, and rightly so. But it refuses to protect the unborn. When their mothers don't want them, their lives are discounted. They are expendable.

At 16 weeks, the baby's hands are perfectly formed, with fingerprints that will identify him for life.

He commands us to do the same. In taking up their cause, we follow His example.

Surely the unborn are the fatherless of our day. The Supreme Court robbed them of a father's protection when it denied men the right to protect their offspring from abortion. Now children in the womb have no father to defend them, and no way to cry out for justice.

God's Word speaks of His compassion for defenseless children. In Psalms, God calls Himself the “Father of the fatherless” (Psalm 68:5). He promises to “vindicate the orphan and the oppressed” (Psalm 10:18).

The One the World Won't Protect
