

A Dreamer's Journey

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF
MORRIS RAPHAEL COHEN

"Like a modern Socrates he wanted to whisk away his students' prejudices. His job as he saw it was to train "thinkers rather than . . . disciples." He was a relentless prober, tough as a drill sergeant with philosophy students, a hollow cheeked scholar who despised automobiles and movies. But hundreds of students flocked to his classroom to join his lifelong search for truth. Where did the search lead him? Morris Cohen gives his answer in the form of a posthumously published autobiography."—Time

Essays on Freedom and Power

BY LORD ACTON

"Acton, together with Tocqueville and Jacob Burckhardt, is one of the few nineteenth century historians who today deserve and attract wide attention, not for the result of their research but for their reflections on the meaning of history and the ethics of politics. Of the three he has perhaps the most to say to our generation."—Hans Kohn in the New York Times

Magic, Science and Religion

BY BRONISLAW MALINOWSKI

"It is a book everyone interested in the history of the science of man should read. To the reviewer it was the occasion for a fresh tribute to a great scientist whose influence is very much alive in the minds and
