individuals who represented or could reach constituencies of their own. These "multipliers" would include parish pastors, elementary and high school faculty members or administration, directors of religious education or pastoral associates at the parish level, and people in various offices of Archdiocesan Central Services or Associated Catholic Charities. The Commission involved itself in a number of efforts in these directions.

This Annual Report will detail Commission activities on these main focus areas, as well as describe other Commission events. The Commission again looks back at a program year with optimism and gratitude, with a deeper sense of the commitment of so many people in the Archdiocese to the cause of justice and peace, and with a renewed spirit for undertaking the deep and challenging tasks which lie before us.

THE BISHOPS' PASTORAL: THE CHALLENGE OF PEACE

The activities of the Commission since the May, 1983 adoption of the Peace Pastoral have included a number of events, programs and resources. Some examples are: a major conference in Baltimore, a 20-page newspaper Supplement, the development of a 10-point Archdiocesan program, and numerous resources and presentations. Again, for the second year in a row, Commission Members or Staff engaged in nearly 100 presentations or appearances in the Archdiocese related to the Peace Pastoral. In the 1984 program year, the Commission's interest in reaching the "multipliers" was further advanced by cooperative programs or efforts with the Division of Schools, the Division of Youth Ministries, with other offices in the Department of Christian Formation, and with involvement in cooperative events such as the Social Ministry Convocation.

One program, developed with the Division of Schools, involved three separate full-day seminars for elementary and high school teachers in the Archdiocese on the Peace Pastoral. Each time, the program was keynoted by Fr. Thomas F. Schindler, SS, Commission Theological Consultant, who described the process, major points, and challenges of the document. Also included were showings of two audio-visual presentations useful in doing education on the Peace Pastoral, and several workshops on the Pastoral's application in high school and elementary school settings. The series was very
